Canadian Boys Made Huns Pay Dearly for Slight Advantage.

Homer Beach Lilley, son of Frank Lilley, manager of the Eagle Pencil Company, of New York City, and a grandson of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Lilley, has been wounded at the front. Pte. Lilley, who is 21 years of age, was at Port Arthur working with an en-gineering party when the war broke out, and enlisted. He was transferred to the 8th Battalion at Winnipeg. A detter recently received by his father, who is a native Londoner, and forwarded to the young soldier's grand-parents, is as follows: About midnight on Wednesday, the German heavy artillery began a terrific cannonade; our guns answered. This awoke the whole line, and in less than a half-hour guns were booming along a front of ten miles from Zonnebeke to Lizerne. All night long the fight raged. Germans Mowed Down. On Thursday, the Germans made a wicked attack on our lines, and with the aid of gas bombs gained a temporary advantage, but they paid dearly for it. We took a stand at St. Julien, just west of the Haanebeek stream, and believe me, we gave them "hell." They were moved down by our infantry fire, which was supported by a hail of shrapnel from our artillery, and the road leading into St. Julien from Kersselaere was covered with German corpses. The sight of their infantry creeping across the open space in front of the trenches in a brilliant sunshine, with hundreds of shells bursting overhead, and a murderous hail of builets all around, was impressive, to say the least. The bursting of the big shells terrify you at first. They make enormous pits in the ground when they strike, and come through the air with the roar of an express train, but in time you get used to it, and laugh at them. We held them on that day, and the next morning advanced and gained some of the lost ground.

It was in this engagement that I got the shrapnel in my left hand and elbow.

Their dash at our front certainly was courageous. This battle will no doubt be one of the heroic incidents of the war in Flanders.
