

But softly round the cypress' foot
Hovered the shadows hushed and mute :
For there the mother and her child
Slumbered :—And still the mother smiled :
 For she had fall'n asleep in death,
 And yielded up life's troublous breath,
And in the Unknown found her child.

THE END.