

with amputation were more important than just isolating those with amputation due to landmine injury. We were thus able to obtain a more accurate assessment of access and utilization of rehabilitation services in the areas surveyed. Rehabilitation and prosthetic services in Mozambique are not exclusively offered to landmine victims but are available for all persons with physical impairment.

Each participant was given a capulana (traditional wrapping cloth worn by Mozambican women). Prior to beginning the surveys, the nature of the gift was discussed with POWER, ADEMO, ADEMIMO, and the Ministry for Social Action. A gift of a capulana was felt to be appropriate, as it is seen as a token of thanks and respect for the time the interviewees had given us.
