

of the words of General Smuts that on August 4, 1914, the British Empire died. Out of the torture of war have come the free, equal, and united states of the British Commonwealth. This equality must involve in the end not only equality of privilege but also equality of responsibility and sacrifice; and it is along this road that Canada must travel.

GEORGE M. WRONG