Methodist Young Men Debaters Deal With Live Topic in Clever Argument.

An interesting debate took place in sellefair avenue Methodist Church An interesting denate took place in Bellefair-avenue Methodist Church last evening. The subject was: "Resolved, That the Commission Form of Government Should Be Introduced in Toronto," and the contending speakers were A. Butson and A. Freyer for the Young Men's Club of Gerrard-street methodist Church, who upheld the affirmative, and Messrs. Dunn and Shepherd from the Bellefair Young Men's Club—the negative.

After an able discussion the three imparish judges gave their verdict in favor of the negative.

Among the arguments adduced by the affirmative were:

Five efficient men, working continuously, are better than twenty-five mediocre men working spasmodically. Overlapping of departments would cease.

The features of the initiative, referendum and recall make the commission system the most democratic possible.

Trained men would be secured and could not evade responsibility.

Continuity would be segmed, and the ward system would be applished.

One hundred and forty-seven American towns and cities have, adopted or applied for the commission system.

An Untried Experiment.

The chief arguments of the negative Commission system as yet practically an untried experiment.

Initiative, referendum and recall are clumsy and unworkable. The power of recall might be worked to further personal jealousy.

Heads of departments under the present system are practically commissioners.

Eight men are now retained in office by public support.
Control of the legislature would be removed, the city would acquire unlimited borrowing power which might soon impair civic credit.
The present system is democratic on best British lines. best British lines.

government which tended to increase our trade, was the making of trade freer with the making of trade freer with the whole world, particularly Great Britain and the United States. (Government cheers and ironical cheers from the opposition). Sir Wilfrid Laurier had made an honest effort at the beginning of his administration to bring better terms with the country to the south, but he had not been able to accomplish anythead free proposals, nothing had been done. Lately the last six years of the reciprocity treaty had been due to the stimulus of the civil war, and he thought the abrogation of that treaty might have been partially effected by antagonism to British subjects for their participation in the strife.

been partially effected by antagonism to British subjects for their participation in the strife.

Changed Conditions.

Since then confederation had been accomplished, the fringe-like units had been bound together, great transportation lines had been laid out, a system of inland waterways established, a national spirit created, and British institutions built up.

Mr. Borden reviewed Canadian national progress and said prosperity was an assured fact. Contrasting conditions, he said there was no comparison between everyday comfort now and what was when he was a boy. "Will you tell me that we in Canada have not every right to be satisfied with the progress we have made?"

Since 1868 Canada has spent about 500 millions in railway development, and the federal and provincial governments had given railway corporations about 55 million acres of the public domain, 75 million more was to be spent on the National Transcontinental, and the Hudson Bay Railway would cost 20 millions.
