To the casual observer they seen to have cause for grievance; but when we analyze these people we find what the trouble really is. They are incapable of independent action. They dare not make the slightest move without as-sistance from some outside source, the source or opinion of some one on whose judgment they are wont to rely. They have no confidence in themselves-do not trust their own owners. They have never iterated to stand squarely on their state, to think their own thoughts, and make their own decisions. They have to confidence in themselves-do not trust their own decisions. They have leaned upon somebody from childhood, all through the formative peol of character-building, until a habit of character-building. Intil a habit of character-building, intil a habit of elening is chronic. Any faculty which is unused for a bog time losses its power. If is a law of nature that we must use or lose, If a man ceases to exercise his miscles they lose their powter. The unsuccess ful instead of using their God-given faculties in reasoning with them-selves, making their own dnai court of ap-peal, grow up weaklings, parasites. God intended them to stand alone, to draw upon His inexhaustible power withou stint. He meant them to be oaks, but they have become vines. Not realising that all growth is from with-in, they have reversed this fundament-al truth and endesvored to draw their strength from the outside. But the price we pay for this shift-ing of responsibility is a very heavy one-the loss of our kingdom. We voluntarily abdicate the throne of per-sonality, resign the priceless privilege thas civilsed land-the right to think, and epeak, and act for himself. It is useless to try to help a person who leans, who cannot stand alone, ho ayoung man to climb a ladder who has not sufficient self-reliance to maintain his position after he has been boosted, he will fail back the moment you let out a clime ender Lord Kitchener fails to mention his name in the weekly report is not such a certainty.
