Opposition defeats, electioneering trickery which distinin the same manner, exert a dispiriting guishes certain sections of the adjacent influence on Opposition leaders fighting for the Treasury benches, and on active Oppositionists who have distinguished themselves in elections, hoping that "our side" will soon have the distribution of the loaves and fishes. It might be supposed that these classes comprise officials in their efforts to elect Caldwell, the whole of the male population of Canada. But it is not so. We have in the country a third element, which is neither Government nor Opposition,neither enthusiasts nor indifferentists, -neither office seekers nor man-worshippers. They are the Railway men. They either have or expect contracts. They hope for "extras," or they anticipate profits on what is yet in the future. To them large Party majorities bring no delight. A Government sustained by a narrow majority, Parties pretty evenly balanced, are the right sort of thing. Then it is they can "make their they can the they can t They hope for "extras," or they anticiinfluence felt." The Government needs their registerness the Government of their assistance; the Government of course, must pay for it. They may hold the balance of power; the Government, with their aid may still hold the Treasury; or the Opposition, with their assistance, may come in and take possession.
