A starting disclosure has been made respecting the death of Shelley, which took place on the 8th of July, 1822. A dying sailor issaid to have been confessed by a priest, who was at the time re quested to give publicity to the state-ment. The confession has through the medium of a friend reached the cars of Miss Trelawney. She has written the account from Rome to her father, who is well known as having been an inti-mate friend of Shelley's. The sailer stated that he was one of the crew that ran down the boat containing Shelloy and Williams, and that it was done under the impression that the rich "Milord" Byron was on board with plenty of money. They did not intend to sunk the boat, but to board her and murder Byron. He says she sank as Captain Trolawney soon as struck. credits the account. He says it so exactly corresponds with the event, that it solves that which has been a mystery it solves that which has been a injectry for half a century. Captain Roberts who after several days dragging succeeded in recovering the Don Juan (Shelley's boat) said that every thing was in her, showing that she had not been capsized. The gunwale was stove in, the hull half full of blue clay, many the traphoral quarter. of the timbers on the starboard quarter broken, so that the opinion expressed by many at the time was that "a native | boat had tried to board her paratically, and that "she had been run down by some of the feluceas in the squall.
