

indicating that the report has been filed and then as the next thing bringing down the legislation.

You know and I know and the country knows---and he ought to know better than anybody else---that there were many long days of discussion with regard to the Duncan Report. If my friend Mr. Rhodes thinks that all my leader had to do was to dip his hand into the treasury and get the money to implement the findings, he does not know very much---he does not know as much as the country knows---about what took place. I found in season and out of season natural differences of opinion. It is an open secret: all parts of the country did not see alike, and the idea was, if possible, to "sell" the Duncan Report and its findings to our friends from other provinces; and I endeavoured to do that in my small way. But what did I find? I would enter Council one day and we would discuss the matter: there would be some differences of opinion. Next day I would come in and would find that some particular colleague seemed to have changed his opinion, and I had a shrewd suspicion that my friend the leader of the Government had been discussing the matter with that colleague. Day after day and week after week the matter was discussed and colleagues came around to see our point of view. I want to say that before my friend Mr. King was able to give to the Province of Nova Scotia the money to implement the
