

Enjoyed.

In the course of my journey through this 'vale of tears' at one place or another I have listened to the discourses of every public man of any prominence in the Dominion and I can truthfully say that upon the occasion of this tribute as you so humbly described your brilliant address I received more real satisfaction and solid comfort than ever before.

No doubt "the Hamilton speech" and "the Winnipeg address" were very necessary in their way but as a humble "layman of the layman" and only a casual acquaintance I make bold to hold that your admirers were more proud of you on the Saturday afternoon in the C. Latour Lecture after the completion of your address as I heard it than hitherto.
