

LIFE INSURANCE

The most important interest to be considered in planning at the death of a life insurance beneficiary are (1st) the safety and stability of the plan and policy; (2nd) the most advantageous method of the selection of rates and general arrangements; (3rd) the character of the agent and their relation to the institution.

If these features are right everything is right, whether a company be large or small, old or young. No company stands better in any one or all of these than the
