Testing Cream.
What constitutes a fair and honest sample of cream to give a proper test? Our cream is collected twice a week and dumped into a pail to be weighed. Before the last canful went away I stirred it up well and took what I considered a fair sample. When the man called for the cream, he took a sample for the creamery and one for myself. I tested it under the same conditions and it went two points higher than the other. What is the right sample?
T. A.

Ans.—When taking a sample of either milk or cream, it should be thoroughly mixed by pouring from one vessel to another. If the cream stands for some time it will be thicker on top than at the bottom, and pouring from one receptacle to another is the only way it can be properly stirred. A couple of ounces is all that is really needed for a test, but this must be a representative sample. In testing cream it should be weighed into the test bottles rather than measured. One must be careful of the acid used. A too strong or too weak acid will not give accurate results. Cream taken under identical conditions and tested with the same acid should give the same results. The test bottles hold about 17.5 c. c. This constitutes a sample!

Eel-Worms.
What is the significance of microscopic eel-like animals being present in home-made maple vinegar?
2. Do eel-worms eat yeast plants?
3. How may eel-worms be destroyed?
J. D. L.

Ans.—These eel-worms are sometimes very common in vinegar, especially in old vinegar or in vinegar barrels which contain a considerable amount of the so-called "mother of vinegar." While it is not nice to think of making use of the liquid when these little worms are present, yet they are so very small that they almost always escape detection and they seem to be quite harmless when consumed with the vinegar. However, you will probably be able to get rid of them completely by placing your vinegar in bottles or jars in a pan of hot water and then bringing the water to a boil. Straining through very closely woven cotton cloth would probably have the same effect.

The life history of these eel-worms is not very well known. It is not likely that they eat yeast plants, although they very often occur in ordinary flour paste which has become sour. It is difficult to understand how they get into it in the first place. As I have pointed out, the eel-worms in vinegar are harmless but you may get rid of them in the way which I have described.

Goslings Dying.
We have two geese and a gander and have hatched thirty goslings. The first thirteen did well but the younger ones started to die. Eleven have died and the rest do not look healthy. They seemed to cripple up and could not walk. We hatched them mostly by hens and kept hens in coops but allowed the goslings to run. We also kept the goose penned up. Hers all died. We fed bran, shorts, cornmeal and a little whole wheat.
C. P.

Ans.—It is probably difficult to locate the exact cause of the goslings' death. Geese are naturally grazers and one of the main essentials for goslings is to have the liberty of a range on tender green feed, that is a nice piece of tender grass that is short, or to put them out on a little rye or fall wheat is also considered good. They also require an abundance of grit and if confined to a small yard they should have artificial shade, not complete, but so that they may get into shade when they wish. If your correspondent has used equal parts of good shorts and family cornmeal mixed with sour skim-milk and added about a teaspoonful of coarse, sharp sand or fine gravel to 1/2 pail of feed I think they would have come along better. I would not advise feeding them more than they can eat, or what they will clean up in five to ten minutes. Be sure to supply green feed. In this particular case it looks as if the trouble may have been caused from a shortage of green feed and grit.
