"They are at Arcady most likely. I will go there," he thought, turning away with a bitter sigh, for the loneliness, of the rectory had struck a strange despair to his heart.

the rectory had struck a strange despair to his heart.

Toiling on up the village street, presently he came in sight of Forest Church with the long bars of the setting sun shining on its stained glass windows. Beyond it stretched God's Acre, its monumental stones glimmering whitely in the fading roseate glow. Why did his heavy eyes rest on them with such painful interest. Why did they single out a new stone—tall, yet broken off at the top, tapering whitely against the glorious tints of the sky. A wild fear struck coldly to his heart and dashing open the little gate he followed the grassy, winding paths to the broken shaft, until kneeling, faint and trembling from weakness, upon a new-made grave, he looked up and read deep in the marble:

"Resurgam."

"Resurgam."

How long Colonel Fairlie lay there, stunned and heart-broken by this terrible shock, he could never afterward remember. The sun had sunk and the stars had came out in the azure heavens, the dew fell on the flowers and the white, upturned face of the man lying there half unconscious in his despair. Oh! why had he failed to save her life? Why had he lived while Vivian died?

knelt in tears above the turf that "I knelt in tears above the turf that blossomed o'er the mound That held my world of love and grief within its narrow bound.
The graes was springing sweet and green Above her dreamless head, and her rest was calm and peaceful in the city of the dead.

"Kneeling in heart-breaking silence, my face on that lowly grave,
The passionate tide of anguish rolled over me wave on wave.
On that dearest spot under heaven, the heart, in its overflow, Whispered its grief and devotion to the silent sleener below."

heart, in its overflow,

Whispered its grief and devotion to the silent sleeper below."

The night was far spent when the unhappy man lifted his head from the dust of her grave and looked up with burning eyes to the pitying stars, the silent witpesses of his pain. In the long hours of brooding there had crept into his heart a bitter hate for the woman who had wrought this irredeemable woe.

Staggering up to his feet slowly and painfully, like one who had received a mortal wound, Colonel Fairlie leaned his hot brow against the cold mar le, and, lifting his right hand upward that Heaven might witness his solemn vow, exclaimed hoarsely:

"Rest in peace, sweet Vivian, the innooent victim of a revengeful woman's hate! Be it mime to avenge your wrongs.
Nothing shall divert me from my path.
Step by step I will follow on her remoraeless track until I have wrung her cruel heart as she has wrung mine in your death! Here, by your grave, fair Vivian, I swear vengeance to the death!"

Somewhere in the distance a clock struck the midnight hour as the man, laying his burning lips once, twice, thrice
to the cold marble, as if to seal his bitter vow, turned away with the fire of incipient madness in his eyes. ter vow, turned away with the fire of incipient madness in his eyes.

CHAPTER XXX. But sweet Vivian Vane was not lying nder the marble shaft in Forest Church under the marble shalt in Forest Church yard, as all the world believed. She was tossing in delirious pain among the snowy pillows of Emma Morley's little sottage home, watched tenderly by the widow and her pretty, romantic daughflushed cheeks, and feverish, unseeing eyes. He started as he gazed at her, and cried:

"Bring a lighted candle, please."
He held it eagerly before her eyes in the darkened room; but the white lids did not waver, the blue eyes did not shrink. The sudden fear that had come to him was an awful reality. Poor Vivian was blind!

Emma sobbed bitterly when Dr. Charley told them the truth.

"Oh, how sad it is!" she cried, tearfully. "Perhaps she will die, and we will never know her name or who her friends were. And to think that when she seemed so much better last night I wanted to leave her and go to the ball at Forest Inn! I'm glad now that you locked me into my room, mamma, and tied my hands to keep me from climbing out of the window!"

Mrs. Morley appeared embarrassed, and the young doctor looked from one to the other in much amusement, for Emma's passion for dancing was well known in the neighborhood, and also her mother's aversion to it. But Emma's words had thrown new light on the subject of his patient's relapse. Most probably there had been high words on the subject, and this had overexcited the desicate patient last night.

He carefully prepared a powder for the patient, which ne gave Mrs. Morley, saying that it might have the effect of cheeking the high fever that now raged in the patient's veins.

"I will call again at midnight to see if she is better," he said, and Emma told him that she would sit up with the patient all night. She went with him to the door, and Dr. Charley, with a sly glance over his shoulder to see that the mother was not looking, gave the romantic little maiden a novel to read.

"A love story—Lady Gay's Pride.'

That will help you to keep awake," he said, with a smile.

"Oh, thanks! I shall enjoy it so much! I do like lots of love. Has it got a disappointed wife in it?" whisper-

Emma did not go in just yet. She lingered to watch the young physician vault lightly into the saddle and ride, away, and when he was out of sight she sighed softly and fell into a dream that lasted until her mother's impatient voice recalled her into the house.

CHAPTER XXXI.

"Where have you been, Emma? I have been waiting for you over ten minutes!" Mrs. Morley, said, sharply, tying her bonnet strings as she spoke, with the bonnet strings as she spoke, with the air of one wno is going out.

"I was only at the gate, mamma," Emma answered, with a roguish twinkle in her bright eyes as she thought of the tempting novel she was holding demurely under her apron—the gift of the fascinating Dr. Miller, while she had lingered with him.

"At the gate until the moonbeams Had quenched all the stars in theid Had quenched light."

Mamma gave her a sharp glance, and said, curtly:

"I'm obliged to go to the hotel and take this lace I have mended to one of the lady boarders. I may be detained a long while, so upstairs now to our mysterious patient, and mind you do not fall asleeep over your silly love dreams!" She bustled out of the house as she spoke, and took her way through the moonlight toward Forest Inm with her little bundle of mended lace, while her daughter closed the door and sought the sick-room.

The beautiful invalid had fallen into a deep slumber, and lay breathing heavily among the pillows, her eyes half open, her cheeks burning crimson with fever. Emma stood over her pilyingly for some time, then the temptation to look at the new book overpowered her, and turning softly away, she entered the open door of her own little bedroom adjoining, turned up the flame of the oil lamp to its highest extent, and sat down for just one little peep at "Lady Gay's Pride."

Ah, Emma, dear romantic little soul, how long that peep lasted! Why must down for just one little peep at "Lady Gay's Pride."

Ah, Emma, dear romantic little soul, how long that peep lasted! Why must you look at the middle of the book to see how the plot progressed? Why glance at the end to see if Lady Gay really married noble Alex. Warren? Could you not hear in the next room the sick woman tossing and moaning as the fever mounted higher and higher? On the mantel beside the glass of water lay the powder that should have been given her hours ago, but it remained there forgotten by the faithless little nurse in her absorption in the novel.

The night hours wore on apace. The invalid lay upon the couch, her stupor occasionally broken by delirious mutterings, but Emmn had for a little while forgotten everything but the fascinating pages over which she pored. In fancy she wan wandering through the artists and the state of fancy she wan wandering through the sylvian shades of Elmer Court with handsome Alex. Warren, and imagining handsome Alex. Warren, and imagining, herself the scornful Lady Gay, while she compared the hero with Dr. Charley, the former suffering, I am sorry to relate, from Emma's partial judgment. Suddenly the girl awoke with a start of surprise to her real surroundings. Throwing down her book, she ran into the other room. Her eyes turned toward the snowy bed. Heavens!

the other room. Her eyes turned toward the snowy bed. Heavens!

The room was empty!

Emma stood staring with dilated eyes at the empty bed, a superstitious awe fishing her soul with dread. The beautiful stranger had vanished as mysteriously as she came. Where was she! Would she ever find her again?

But her trance of horror lasted only a moment, and, turning, she ran wildly down the stairs with a realization of the truth coming swiftly to her. The patient had risen from her bed and wandered in the deliroum of fever.

"But she is blind. She can not go very far; I will soon overtake her," sobbed Emma; and quick as a flash she was out into the glorious late September night. The chill of the nearing midnight hour struck coldly on her heated brow, and she remembered that her charge had on only a thin white wrapper, and was bareheaded and shoeless in the night.

"Oh, how wicked I have been, how careless! I can never forgive myself, and Dr. Miller will never forgive myself, and Dr. Miller will never forgive myself, and Dr. Miller will never forgive myself, sottage home, watched tenderly by the widow and her pretty, romantic daughter.

"Have you found out anything about her yet, Dr. Miller?" asked Emma, day after day, with eager curiosity; but his answer was always

"Not yet, Miss Emma; but I hope she will soon be better, and then she can tell us something about herself. By the way, I must congratulate you on being such a good little nurse. I hope if I am ever aick I shall have some one like you to care for me," and handsome Dr. Charley would look so softly into the girl's starry eyes that Emma's cheeks would flush like twin roses.

But this morning, when Dr. Charley paid his daily visit, the patient was not so well, and the imrovement he had fancied yesterday was not visible.

"Has anything occurred to disturb her? She looks wildly excited. Yesterday she was decidedly improving; to-day she has typhoid symptoms," he said, anxiously, as he noted the bounding pulse, flushed cheeks, and feverish, unseeing eyes. He started as he gazed at her, and cried.

"Bring a lighted candle, please."

"Yes, I think so—two of them, and lots of love," Dr. Charley replied, laughingly, amused at her eagerness; and he lingered with her for several minutes at the cottage door, thinking what a tender little wild flower she read of the country of the

WHAT THE CLERGYMAN SAID

Hanover, Ont.—No other class of men have the opportunity to do as much good, and be such helpful influences, as the clergy. Not only in their sermons, but in their daily life, they can teach us the better way of living. The example of the Rev. Mr. Brand, of Hanover, is one to be followed in every home in Canada. Owing to the arduous duties, incidently to his parish, the reverend gentleman suffered severely with liver trouble, accompanied with constipation and indigestion. But he quickly found relief, and in a letter tells how. "I can say I like Fruit-atives very much, as say I like Fruit-a-tives very much, as I am troubled with Liver Trouble—and shall continue to use them."

"Fruit-a-tives" are made of fruit juices and valuable tonics—and form the ideal combination for the treatment of Biliousness, Constipation, Headache, and all Stomach, Bowell, Kidney and Skin Troubles. 50c. a box

CHANGE IN MATRICULATION.

University Candidates Must Secur Forty Per Cent. in 1909.

Toronto, Jan. 30 .- A new standard for the junior matriculation examination has been adopted by the university of Toronto. Candidates in 1909 will be required to make 40 per cent of the marks on each paper. In the past to pass the examination 33 1-3 per cent.

Paris, Jan, 29.—Replying to the theme advanced by Paul Bourget in his play, "A Divorce," which was given in this city last night, Aristide Briand, the Minister of Justice and Worship, practically comes out in favor of the trial marriage. He endorses the idea of the gradual evolution fo the doctrine of divorce until the point is reached where a marriage may be contracted for a specified period under legal safeguards protecting the interests of both parties. He declares it impossible for those about to enter upon this relation to know the true character of their partners, and that it is unnatural and intolerable to expect an ill-mated pair to drag out a miserable existence because they blundered on entering the most vital relations in life.

WELLAND CANAL TRAFFIC.

WELLAND CANAL TRAFFIC

Grain Receipts at Port Colborne Aggregate 1,669,135 Bushels.

Welland, Jan. 29.— Interesting statistics have been compiled relative to trade on the Welland Canal during the past year. Grain receipts at Port Colborne, that is lighterages from vessels passing thoough, amounted to 1, 669,135 bushels in 1907, an increase of 173 607 over the year previous, despite 173,697 over the year previous, despite the fact that there were no receipts for April and December in 1907. There was a considerable falling off in receipts of grain for domestic use.

FINGER PRINTS ABANDONED.

Asiatic Difficulty in Transvaal Said

to Have Been Settled. London, Jan. 30.—The Johannesburg correspondent of the Standard says the difficulty between the Government and the Asiatics has been definitely settled on the basis of the Government accepting signatures as the means of registration instead of insieting upon finger prints. All the Indians under the Registraton ger prints. All the Indians imprisoned under the Registraton Act will be re-leased, including their leader, Grand Hi, who, it is understood, has accepted the foregoing solution on behalf of his countrymen.

BURGLAR SHOT DEAD

Four Men Assaulted a Night Watch

Montreal, Jan. 29.—Between I and 2 o'clock this morning a shooting affair occurred at the C. P. R. yards at St. Henri, and as a result Alfred Gosselin is dead. He and three comparions assaulted the night watchman, who fired in self-defence, hitting Gosselin in the abdomen. Gosselin was an old-time burglar, and had served time in both the jail and penitentiary.

BURNED TO DEATH.

Fatal Accident in a Montreal Shirt

Montreal, Jan. 29.—While at work in the Standard shirt factory to-day Robert Bailey was burned to death. The victim was at work in the engine room, when something went wrong with the steam pipes in the rear of the fire box. Bailey went behind with a bundle of waste, and while he was working at the broken pipes the wast caught fire and the man was caught like a rat in a trap.

Cwing to the inflammable nature of the material, in a moment the victim's clothing was a mass of flames, and before the fire could be extinguished the unfortunate man was frightfully burned all over the body and died shortly afterwards.

Women Bandits.
Lublin, Russian Poland, Jan. 29.—The police of this city have unearthed a band of robbers composed entirely of women, and the leaders have been taken into custody. These female bandits are responsible for a long series of highway robberies. They went well armed and usually made their attacks upon unaccompanied men or women.
