for years the Mulholland outfit or Liberty street and in that vincity have been bothering the police by their unken habits and general uselessness police have tried hard to put them on the right road to decency, at least, but have failed miserably, and the setret of their failure lies in a fact that was uncovered on Saturday night. Mrs. Agnes Mulholland and Mrs. Mary Midnter, both of 57 Liberty street, and James Curtain, of the mountain top, went out Saturday on a boozing expedition on the mountain, and with them dition on the mountain, and with them was a four-year-old lad, son of Mrs. Midwinter. Starting a youngater in a life of that kind at the age of four years is just about the limit; the police intend to take steps to clean out the Mulholland ranch, and put all the children they lind there in charge of the Children's Aid Society. The two women and Curtain were brought into the city and locked up, and were so drunk they forgot all about the little boy wandering around the mountain. Yesterday morning Mr. Dan Cotter telephoned the police that a small lad was wandering around his back yard, and Constable Bramer was sent up by Deskman Hawkins and brought him to the city. The three boozers were each fined $2 this morning.

How to Keep Juice in a Pie. Any one who has ever had the juice from an apple, rhubarb ar other pie run all out into the oven while baking knows just how annoying it is. I have overcome the difficulty by taking a strip of clean white cloth, about an inch wide and long enough to lap when put around the edge of the pie plate, wringing it out of hot water, doubling together lengthwise, and pinning tight around the edge of the plate. When the pie is baked, take off this rim, and you will find the juice in the pie instead of in the oven.—From Woman's Home Companion for June.

The option on the Hamilton franchise in the International League, referred to exclusively in the Times last Thursday, was taken up on Saturday by Wm. Austin, a mining stock broker, who is acting for a syndicate headed by Harry Bainfield. The price paid for the franchise is $750, and the transfer is to take place on June 15. The new management will, of course, honor all season tickets sold. The sale of the club may prove a good thing for the league, as Fred Paige, the promoter, will be able to do some missionary work on the circuit. He will likely take the Erie, Pa., franchise. A meeting of the officers of the league will be held in Brantford this afternoon, when it is expected that franchises will be league a six-club affair.

The Drug Habit.

In a Massachusetts town the other day a number of youths were gathered in by the police who were having a "co-caine party." It is said that the use of this drug in saloons is becoming more and more common on the other side of the line, where it can be obtained as readily as whisky. Its use is more fatal than any alcoholic beverage, as it leaves it wreck in a short time. In this country a business of this kind could hardly be done openly. Nevertheleas it is said that numbers of young women as well as young men are being initiated into the seductive mysteries of the syringe. The authorities should make a strangous eril at both of the seductive mysteries of the syringe. The authorities should make a strangous eril to to stamp out this insidious evil and bring to book those who are promoving the traffic.—The Home Journal.

Wells of England Whose Waters Are Sought by Wives,

For the enterprising tourist with an eye to out-of-the-way romance there are hundreds of magical wells scattered all over England, each possessing a picturesque story of its own and its miraculous powers, which range from curing insanity to telling the curious maiden how long she will have to wait for a husband

There are at least a hundred of these wonderful weit it Dozinia atome, many of them hidden away where even the most observant tourist may pass them by without suspicion of their presence. One of them, however, Southey, has made famous the world over, and this is the Well of St. Keyne, which stands by the side of a pretty country road about an hour's walk from Looe, in Cornwall. Such is the magic of its waters that the husband or wife who is the first to drink them after leaving the altar is assured the upper hand for the rest of their joint lives. The bride of whom Southey tells us, it will be remembered, did not wait until after the marriage ceremony to pay a visit to the There are at least a hundred of these membered, did not wait until after the marriage ceremony to pay a visit to the well, but took the precaution of taking a bottle of the water with her to church, and thus forestalled her less provident husband.

faith she had been far wiser than I,

For she took a bottle to church."

A well of peculiar fascination for unappropriated maidens is to be found at Trelleck, in Monmouthshire. It is known as the "virtuous well," and for generations the local maidens have credited it with marvelous powers in forceasting with marvelous powers in forecasting their matrimonial future. All they have to do is to drop a pebble into its water and count the resultant bubbles, for each bubble represents a month of for the day that is to make brides. In order to propitiate the genius of the well it is necessary to drape the brambles which shade it with pieces of white cloth.

But all Welsh wells are not quite so beneficent as this of Trelleck, for at Llanelian, in Denbigshire, you will find one presided over, according to local superstition, by a very evil-minded genius. If you have any very special enemy whom you want to consign to an unhappy fate all you have to do is to go to St. Elian's Well, scratch your enemy's initials on a smooth stone and throw the stone, together with a crooked pin, into the water, and, so they say, your worst wishes for his future will be more than realized. re than realized.

your worst wisnes for his future will be more than realized.

Many of these so-called holy wells have wonderful medicinal virtues—indeed, some of them are said by doctors to be far superior to the waters of Homburg, Nauheim or Wildbad. One of them, St. Winifred's at Holywell, in Flintsbire, is credited with cures that savor of the miraculous and it is the physical Mecca of hundreds of devout Catholics every year.

A very romantic story is told of the origin of this well. St. Winifred, the winsome daughter of a Welch chief. was wooed twelve long centuries ago by a young prince, Caradoc, of evil repute, who, when she persistently declined his advances, killed her in a fit of ungovernable passion. From the spot on which the stream of St. Winifred; life bload the stream of St. Winifred; life able passion. From the spot on whithe stream of St. Winifred's life blo able passion. From the spot on which the stream of St. Winifred's life blood welled out there sprang another stream of crystal water, which was for so many centuries to work miracles in her name. The wells at Tissington furnish a very year. On this anniversary five pictures are made—one for each of the five wells—out of flowers and leaves, and after a beautiful and appropriate service in the church a procession is formed and these pictures are taken to dress the wells, the remainder of the day being given up to junketing and mild revelry.

There is practically no ill that flesh is heir to for which one or other of these wells does not supply a cure, according to those who believe in them. St. Niniam's Well, in Cornwall, is said to have restored many lunatics to sanity. The process, however, cannot be commended on the ground of gentleness, for the unhappy patient was thrown bodily into the well and soused until he had scarcely any breath left in his body. But the poor madman who was taken for a cure to the Llandegia Well in Wales, was even more to be pitied, for, after he had been nearly drowned, he was trussed like a fowl and left all night under the communion table in the church in company with a cock or hen, with the object of driving the evil spirit. At Walsingham may still be seen a well whose waters are credited with magical powers in curing ailments of the stomach and head, and in past centuries thousands are reported to have found health there when all the resources of the medical science of the time had found the control of the stomach and head, and in past centuries thousands are reported to have found health there when all the resources of the medical science of the time had
