From the Sun and New York Herald.) An American woman recently returned from Turkey said that one of the greatest changes from prethe growing tendency among the Turkish women to abandon the veil which in the past was an indispensible part of their attire. She says that in Constantinople one seldom sees a Turkish woman with her face covered with a heavy black veil. Habit and custom remain so strong, however, that the Turkish woman clings to the veil as a sort of symbol but, at the

"He Had Went."

"I have told you I don't know how often, my lad, not to say "I have went," remarked the village dominie to his most hopeless pupil. "Now you will stay in and write the correct expression a hundred times."

After school, Tommy set to work to scrawl his lines. When he had finished he left them on the master's desk with a little note.

"Dear teacher," it ran. "I have wrote, "I have gone" a hundred times.
