LONDON, MONDAY, SEPT. 4. Labor Day.

made the holiday its own. At least, to defeat. the formal celebration of the day is promoted exclusively by members of trades unions, though all citizens may enter into its spirit, which is a recognition of the dignity of manual toil. Everything that dignifies and ennobles labor is for the welfare of all. In this young country, where the inequalities of older civilizations have not been reproduced in all their severity, and where the door of opportunity is open to every man, the word labor is not the badge of one class marked off from the rest of society, or designating a certain social stratum. Still, we have our problems growing out of the organization of industry, and these have created a class consciousness among the toilers, and led many of them to combine for the purpose of collective bargaining with those who would profit by their labor.

Combination is the tendency of the age. The smaller industries are combining, ostensibly to effect economies in production and distribution, frequently to fetter competition, Capitalists are pooling their resources to withstand the aggression of labor, and workingmen are combining as never his wife's mother has been there?" before to procure the maximum of advantage for themselves. That all these forces are working to some good end, no one may doubt, unless he bclieves the world is destined to grow worse instead of better, although before the solution is reached society may be shaken to its foundations by the irrepressible conflict.

The trades union movement is the most portentous fact of the last half century. Every student of the industrial history of England, which country may be taken as a type, is obliged to admit that the organization of the laboring classes has been a powerful uplift. The invention of the steam engine and the rise of the factory system destroyed the eld relations between capital and labor. An unparalleled impetus was given to production and to the accumulation of wealth, but it is an incontestable fact that the condition of the working classes in England for over half a century was most dressing all in white, but then deplorable. It was a dark and terrible chapter, which was not exaggerated by Marx in his great work "Das Kapital." Much of the improvement came bout by the growth of humanitarian sentiment, independent of the efforts of the working classes to remedy their two boys. lot, but they secured many of their elementary rights only by titanic struggles. It was the cruelest of paradoxes that the dogmas of the early economists, which were so powerful a force shackles, opposed a barrier to the tion. The wages fund theory, which position, being eventually included was accepted as gospel by the thinkers

Therefore, with great attention, and his orator all efforts of the working classes to raise the general level of wages were futile, excepting a restraint upon the increase of their numbers. This was the "iron law of wages," the message of hopelessness which caused political economy to be called the dismal sci- strained to the despair of foreigners. ence. This remorseless theory has now been abandoned or profoundly modified, but it influenced legislation for a generation. The doctrine of laissez faire, and the belief in "freedom of contract," falsely so-called because the freedom was usually on one wife. side only, were carried to such an extreme that laws dictated by humane feeling for the regulation of the hours of labor for children, the prohibition of female labor in the coal mines, and even for the simplest sanitary precautions in mines and factories, were vehemently opposed on doctrinaire grounds by men of the loftiest character. Cobden, one of the kindest of men, who had the welfare of the working classes at heart, advised them to ask for no restrictions upon employers, and Have you "Kissed Me in the Moor to put no faith in combination, but to light? trust to emigration and natural causes for the improvement of their position. In every civilized country there is now a voluminous code for the protection of labor, designated as factory laws, and no enlightened economist will say that these are not necessary or beneficial, no matter what objection he may offer on general principles to the ex-relations between man and man. The natural right of workingmen long denied them by the classes who made the laws, to combine for the purpose of bargaining with employers Society. "Yes, I was reading in the papers of course, limited by the equal right of vived. Do you ride, too?" others to refuse to join them. The liberty which trade unionists claim for themselves they must concede to others. The power which they have obtained in the present day carries with it, as all power does, the responably. Organized labor may be despotic, just as capital may be. On occasions it has been, if not consciously tyrannical, at least misguided. In Australia and New Zealand the state has undertaken to interfere with the law of supply and demand, and prevent open warfare able tween labor and capital, by means of the kopie and the place of the kopie and the kopie and the kaffirs were busy beating.
