

Miscellaneous.

Our Boys. The station in life which our boys will be best qualified to fill is a question which should be decided only after mature deliberation and careful consideration.

Give them first as good an education as is practicable, which will develop them, and set very much in determining their proper sphere in life. Better, perhaps, let them not independently as first, and experience may teach them that they are wrong.

What the boy can do to the best advantage is a difficult question in most cases to decide. He has possibly many little fancies in his youthful ardor he imagines that he may yet be able to accumulate the wealth of a Vanderbilt or attain the state of a Washington or a Grant.

Perhaps the father is living in the old home occupied by his father before him; everything in and about it is unattractive. He has been accustomed to the style and the place of his father. He is, or imagines he is, contented and happy, and the idea of making the home attractive and pleasant for the children never for a moment enters his head.

With every one of these purchases the dealer gave a paper book of instructions away, and then the children were required to put their pencil to the exercises in it. They did it, and from that time forth, the domestic nursery was deserted. Of course, simple flannel shirts and knickerbockers were provided, with cheap flat-headed shoes, for all five, and training up muscles became the order of the day.

The fact is, the home should be the most attractive and harmonious spot on earth to the boy. It is not advisable to make the home as neat as a paragon, to accomplish this need involve a large expenditure of money. Only the most essential and the most useful should be purchased.

Give them plenty of good reading matter, and allow them rational amusement at home, and they will be much more likely to be contented and happy. They will be contented and happy, and they will be contented and happy.

One secret of keeping young, is to keep at work, and never allow the rust to collect on one's weapons. Worry corrodes, but steady mental work strengthens, especially when one obeys the simple laws of health which God has written on our bodies.

When Children Play.

What to do with restless, noisy children on a rainy day is no longer a bitter question with the progressive mother, whose babies are learned little kindergarten and who are firm against whines or severity as a means of keeping peace in the household.

Down stairs all during the week Saturdays the literary head of the house sits peacefully at his desk, but no tumbler about a dozen of amateur hunters or piercing shrieks of human locomotives to pierce his train of thoughts. No parities are raised, no coals set by the ear, no maternal bronchitis tubes are hoarse from correction and fairy-story telling because of this home of athletics.

The children themselves get through the day without quarreling, fretting or falling into mischief, and rather rejoice in the element weather that keeps them busy over their new found treasures.

So much the better, for a gymnasium ought to have wooden walls. Therefore, over the home plain boards were nailed. Then the children were taken down, and five of them, to a sporting goods shop and allowed to select the requisite furnishings. The girls were given a pair of roller skates, and the boys a pair of roller skates, and a pair of roller skates.

With every one of these purchases the dealer gave a paper book of instructions away, and then the children were required to put their pencil to the exercises in it. They did it, and from that time forth, the domestic nursery was deserted.

Other boys and girls crowded in to see the fun, and great was the applause showered on the youthful prowess of the day. The news of the gymnasium getting about, other mothers followed suit, in chasing out the superabundance of toys and picture books and substituting complete athletic fittings.

Agricultural.

Pat to Death on Grain. A man in Hallowell, Me., got into a quarrel with his horse and "got around," and his horse was hatched last spring die off. Here is what he says:

I started on a poultry business this spring and hatched about 180 chicks, of which 90 are still alive. I feed cracked corn, oats, bran, and cornmeal. I feed about one-half pint of each the morning to about 20 chicks, and one-half quart of cracked corn at noon, and about as much at the evening. What makes them die? I have about twenty chicks, and one of them is dead. What can be the matter with them? They all seem to be fat and all around on the neck, but they do not lay.

For the food of a housewife we know of nothing better than filling in from six inches to one foot deep, or more if the ground is hard. Then the soil is covered with a layer of straw or hay, and the surface is covered with a layer of straw or hay, and the surface is covered with a layer of straw or hay.

Fruits Which Act as Tonic.

"A dish of apples," says a German scientist, "is often worth a dozen doctor's prescriptions." Not in case of acute cases, of course, but where one suffers from sleeplessness, indigestion and weakness generally. By a very nice provision of nature this fruit in the temperate zone can be had all the year round, and the belief in the virtues of apples holds that we should eat them with as much regard to health as we eat bread and meat for sustenance.

Next perhaps in value to this fruit is the fig, which it is eaten fresh or dry. In northern climates dried or pressed figs may be had and are eaten with exactly the same results as fresh figs.

One way of helping the victims of the alcohol or opium habit is to serve them at every meal and every time in the day, oranges, when in season, and lemons and limes the twelve months round. The juice of these fruits counteracts the fearful thirst and cravings the liquor inspires.

The Household.

Many persons cannot take plain cod-liver oil. They cannot digest it. It upsets the stomach. Knowing these things, we have digested the oil in Scott's Emulsion of Cod-liver Oil with Hypophosphites; that is, we have broken it up into little globules, or droplets.

We use machinery to do the work of the digestive organs, and you obtain the good effects of the digested oil at once. That is why you can take Scott's Emulsion.

Jobber's Corner.

The Bishop's Condemner. Here is a story an Alabama man tells of Bishop Wilmer. It happened soon after the war. Bishop Wilmer had gone to a northern city to ask aid for the confederate orphans' home in which he was interested. There was a dinner in his honor, and after dinner the bishop was begged to tell a story or two. The bishop said he had a story.

Why are we southerners like Lazarus? The guests—they were all union men, by the way—expressed many answers. The southerners were like Lazarus because they were poor, because they ate of the crumbs from the rich man's table, because—because of everything anybody could guess.
