

to which he attained were ever regarded by him, not as means to self-promotion, but as gifts to be used in the service of his fellow-men, and that service was rendered with an unselfish readiness and generosity which secures for his memory a warm place in many a heart to-day. Not what he might make for himself, but what he might do for others was the prevailing purpose of his life. Could he have known all the grateful and loving recollections that have been awakened by his death, all the kindly things that have been said of him, by his brethren, by his patients, by his friends, he would have felt that his life had not been in vain. 'He being dead, yet speaketh.' Through his teaching and his example he will still live, and the fruits of his life will be seen in the lives of many of the students who were privileged to know him as teacher and as pattern."
