

imperial policy and the administration of the funds for imperial defence. Do this, and you have already taken a long step towards the solution of the question to which I referred at the outset as the greatest political problem of the century, the federation of the British Empire, in the only way in which, perhaps, such a closer union of its widely scattered parts can ever be effected.