Declined Even to Hear the Argument of the Counsel for the Petitioners.

Regarding the action of the privy council in refusing the right of the Dominion for leave to appeal in the Lord's Day case; one of the leading constitutional lawyers of the city said:

"At this distance and with the meagre details as given in the cable despatch it would be folly to express an opinion in the matter. It would appear, tho, as if the privy council had treated the matter wholly from an academic standpoint—and not as dealing with a specific case, which it was. It would appear as tho the privy council took the ground that the Dominion government, alone has the prerogative to deal with matters relating to the observance of the Lord's Day. When the English mail arrives and we have the opportunity to study the whole text of the argument we will know better the basis upon which they have given the decision.

The privy council refused the petition of the Dominion government we will know better the basis upon which they have given the decision.
