Our air service played iring on the retreating narassing his transports.

ay of the advance we were the battlefield of casualties at behind the line, when one of his adrons of airplanes attacked us. I few close to the ground an sent tream of machine a stream of machine gun bullet; it us and dropped bombs amongst i could see their flaming bullets ni ground all around us, and it wa miracle any of us are allye to this, but Providence protected the left Cross and we are all here. They the Cross and we are all here. They kept this up until a couple of our airmen came to the rescue and put the squadron of planes to flight. Gee, I wish I could have been up their with a machine in my control. Revenge is sweet. I suppose the papers are full of this, of will not bother you with any more of it.

Four in a Funk Hole. Four in a Funk Hole.

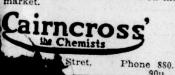

Four of us are living in a funk hole, that is a hole dug in the bank for protection against bullets and splinters, and have a little fire on which we cook our meals. I, as per usual, preside as chef, and we sure are living great; it is much better when there are just a few together, and we can cook our few together, and we can cook our own rations. The regular cooks spoil everything, but this is jake.

Everybody thinks this will hasten the end of the war, and we are still going, in fact, everyone is, from the Americans to the French, so get that old oven of yours out and have about two hundred cakes, a few thousand loaves of home-made bread, ready for me, and don't forget the fried cheese. Remember how I used to wade into that. Oh, boys!
