BEDSTEADS

A display of Bedsteads at all comparable with that now arranged on our third floor cannot, we think, be seen anywhere in Canada. It embraces about every desirable type, from the stately Four-Poster, with canopy top, down to the simple Attic Bedstead in white enamelled iron.

Although the collection is a large one, every Bedstead in it has been selected with careful regard to excellence in design, make and finish. This short list may prove useful to out-of-town residents. We give careful attention to letter orders.

Met Violent Death.
 PORT STANLEY, Nov. 20.—(Special.)—The body of Alfred Hastings was found cold in death just north of the slips leading up to the Franklin House barroom, this morning. There were no marks of violence.
 The mixture which is used for making the silver-plated goods has not changed at all and is the same as that employed when all articles were left with the bare surface of the metal exposed.—Exchange.

Luxurious Bust Easily Obtained

French Method is Explained for the First Time to American Women by Madame Du Barrie.

"How to obtain a luxurious bust development seems to be little understood in this country," says Madame Du Barrie. "The French method, on the contrary, is much more effective, the results more prompt, and the bust becomes more firm, symmetrical and luxurious than by any other method known." By this method the breasts may be developed from 2 to 3 inches in 20 days, in some of the most any age, from young girls to elderly matrons, whether the bust is absolutely not developed at all, or has grown weak and limp, no matter from what cause.

This may sound remarkable to those who have never seen it done, but to any woman who wants to know how she may do it effectively, luxuriously, and above all, in a safe and lasting way, she will be only too glad to send without charge an illustrated booklet in plain, sealed wrapper with full information. It will enclose 2 cents in stamps to pay for postage. We suggest that our lady readers send to Madame Du Barrie, Suite 562, Quinlan Bldg., Chicago, Ill., for this interesting illustrated booklet, enclosing 2 cents in stamps. It is an exceptional opportunity.

MALAY POSSESSES MANY COMMENDABLE QUALITIES

The Malay is described by those familiar with his characteristics as intensely self-respecting. He possesses in a high degree one of the most characteristic qualities of the English gentleman—he is absolutely and supremely sure of himself. It does not occur to him to assume airs of equality or superiority, for the simple reason that he is satisfied with himself as he is; and this, instead of making him unbecomingly conceited, as is sometimes the case with men of other races, causes him to take his place in any society quite naturally with comfort and self and to his neighbors. One may make an intimate friend of a Malay, may share the same hut with him for long periods at a time, and may talk to him of all things within his comprehension, without there being any risk of familiarity breeding contempt of the Malay. He is as different from his position to dig you in the ribs or to call you by your Christian name. He respects himself far too much to dream of taking liberties of that kind. He is courteous and respectful toward those with whom he has to deal. The noisy, loud-mouthed, rambling chatter of the English is unknown to the courteous Malay as one but man's tongue can well be from another. The Malay is incapable of thinking rationally for himself. Why do you not go inside your sentry-box? was a question put to a Sikh who was marching up and down his beat in rain such as the Malays wear prevents one from even opening one's eyes. "There is no order!" was the reply and to his neighbor, as long as there is some one at hand to give an order the Sikh will obey it as few other men will do. He never counts the cost; he never hesitates, also he is commanded to attempt the obviously impossible. There is an order, and the cost of obeying it is not his concern. The Malay, on the other hand, is utterly incapable of being directed into a machine. He always retains his own ideas of how anything ought to be done. He can think for himself and is sure that he does not need to be told how, when, and where to, do a thing.

MANY EAGER SEARCHERS FOR SUNKEN TREASURE

Here is a curious detail concerning the earlier years of the American republic. "I'm 89 years old," said a tall, grey-headed Kentuckian, "and every few years, while I lived near Owensboro, Kentucky, a twinning party would come here and dig out old barge of lead in the Ohio River. In 1811 a band of men were cordoning up the river, all the way from the lead-mines in Missouri, to the mouth with lead ore. No steam power was known in those days, and all big boats had to be pulled up stream by cordle or rope, the men using long poles of the river thru the almost impassable underbrush. The barge of lead was destined for Louisville, Kentucky, there to be melted into bullets, and was to light the British in the war which seemed inevitable. Near Owensboro a big wind storm arose, and great waves lashed over the barge and sank it. It has never been seen or heard of since, altho' innumerable efforts have been made to locate it and recover the cargo. Divers, singly and in companies, government officials and independent wrecking parties have explored the Ohio River without avail. Whenever a strange man or men would appear in that part of Kentucky and ask to be directed to the old grey-haired man in the country it would make people laugh. We always knew they were seeking information concerning the old 1811 barge of lead. The latest attempt, I believe, was made in 1885. Soon after the barge sank earthquakes in the west and south were frequent, and it is believed by many persons that the barge and cargo were buried deep in the river-bed during one of these violent convulsions."

EASY FAT REDUCTION

When butter milk and gymnastics were the only known cures for overweight many people resorted to stay fat—dreadful! Now these two grim lions on the road to slenderness have been overcome and the cure is so simple that it is as easy as a single blessed thing. It does not cost other men will do. He never counts the cost; he never hesitates, also he is commanded to attempt the obviously impossible. There is an order, and the cost of obeying it is not his concern. The Malay, on the other hand, is utterly incapable of being directed into a machine. He always retains his own ideas of how anything ought to be done. He can think for himself and is sure that he does not need to be told how, when, and where to, do a thing.

METHOD OF SECURING OUR EUROPEAN PEARLS

Many are ignorant of the fact that Asia has not a monopoly of the pearls. Also it is pearls—pearls French, Scotch and Swedish. In Scotland and Ireland are a multitude of low people of both sexes and all ages, who always of both sexes and all ages, who always draw prizes, as in the placers of gold or of diamonds. The fishing is rather difficult in the large streams. It is necessary to wait for the summer, when the water is low, the level of the waters. If these are not deep, the fisherman, on discovering a bed, usually plunges in a red net, or, if he is not so fortunate, he uses the primitive tongs. Some prefer to dive, and some are gobs to creep along under water. The most fortunate are those who own a boat and make use of large tongs, similar to the oyster tongs of the Americans. The streams originating in ponds or lakes furnish the best pearls. Only four of these are known—the Ugie, the Ychan, the Don and the Issa. These are fields of pearls have been found in the Doon, the Teith, the Forth, the Eura, the Tay, the Lyon, the Spey and the Ocan. Similar results are possible in France. The pearl-bearing mullet, which yields pearls valued at two thousand francs, is not at all peculiar to the British Isles; it flourishes in abundance in our streams. Without speaking of the Rhine, which is so famous for its pearls, it is common in the Loire, and in the greater portion of our gravelly rivers. We have also several similar pearl-producing rivers. We have the littoral, smaller and with a squarer shell than the preceding; the mullet of the artists, whose shell, oblong and fine, contains certain dry colors employed in the arts. Not only do the fresh-water mussels of our country often enclose pearls, but the salt-water mussels should not be overlooked. In the coves and lakes which they like to frequent, many of our readers do not suspect that magnificent pendants for neck and ears lie concealed.

TIME'S VALUE-WHERE LIFE HANGS ON SINGLE MINUTE

The terrible tragedy in which gamekeepers lost their lives on Maiden Moor, in Yorkshire, recalls a point which sometimes arises in such a case, with which the layman is not familiar. The nature of the charge to be preferred against the offender varies in the course of 24 hours. If the offence can be proved to have been committed within the period beginning one hour after sunset and ending one hour before sunrise, it is poaching. But, if only 30 minutes have elapsed since the sun is timed to have sunk, or if the first second of the first minute of the hour preceding sunrise has been entered upon, then the offence is only trespassing or unlawfully taking game. A man's life has hung upon this fine distinction. A gamekeeper was found dead with the top of his head blown off and his clothes scorched from the flash of a gun discharged at close quarters. A coroner's jury returned a verdict of wilful murder against a notorious poacher. Upon this charge he was committed for trial. There seemed no hope of escape. Evidence was called to prove the firing of the shot and the escape of the culprit from the scene of the crime with the gun still smoking in his hand. Curiously, the very evidence which seemed certain to hang the man served to save him. The witness in cross-examination showed that before he heard the shot fired he had listened to the chiming of the village clock. The time signalled by the clock marked the advent of the hour preceding sunrise. That proved that the man at the time was not poaching, but was trespassing in pursuit of game. Therefore the gamekeeper in trying to arrest him was himself committing an unlawful act, and, in a way, according to the law's reckoning, brought his death upon himself. The capital charge had to be abandoned, and the life of the poacher was saved—saved by a second.

CAPTURING THE OCTOPUS IN SOUTHERN ITALY

Mr. Consul-General Neville-Rofe's report on the trade of South Italy, 1908, contains the following curious passage: "The octopus is very largely used as an article of food in Southern Italy. Its long tentacles are cut transversely, so that when served at table they have the appearance of rings. The fish when taken by day are bared from the crevices of the rocks by a piece of red flannel at the end of a bamboo, which they attempt to grasp, and they are then speared with a trident. At night an iron cradle with bright flame of resinous wood is fixed to the bows of the boat. This attracts the fish and leads him to his doom. The pine-wood fires of these cradles are probably as ancient as they are picturesque, but in the last few months they have been entirely superseded by acetylene gas, which gives a much stronger light and has no artistic pretensions. The first men to use this light secured enormous catches of the fish and jealously kept their secret. After a while it leaked out, and now it is the general and accepted light for the purpose, and there can be little doubt that the coast will soon be over-fished, and that the octopus will be rare instead of cheap and plentiful. In the West of England it is said that the octopus spoils the fisheries by devouring the small fry, and it may interest Cornish and Devonshire fishermen to know this simple means of decreasing the number, and also that the fish itself is an excellent article of food."
