Many an unpleasantness, to give it a mild term, has arisen from ill-natured remarks intended to get the player "up in the air," and readers of this column no doubt can call several cases to mind with little difficulty and without going back far in history! A victory won by such methods is not earned, nor is the popularity of the game encreased.

Rolling for turkeys has been the popular pastime during the past week. League bowling is gradually being discarded until after the holidays, tho a small few of the leagues continue thru without a break. Some more series winners were decided and new starts were made in the second series in others.

One close race was finished on Friday night, when the Night Hawks won out in the Central League by taking two out of three from Hammond Bros. The two ware tied for first place and the contest was a do or die battle. The first game went to Hammond Bros by four pins, but in the second they dropped 75 pins and low, by that margin, while in the final string the Night Howks rolled nearly 900 and won away off. The closeness of this race can be judged when it is noted that three teams are tied for second, just one same behind the winners.

NEW YORK, Dec. 24.—Death has reapeda rich hrvest in the field of sport and athletics during the year now drawing to a close. Baseball, in particular, has lost an unusually harge number of its leaders. Prominent among those identified with the national game who have passed away during the year are Thomas J. Lottus, one of the most famous baseball players and managers of history: Henry V. Lucas, who owned the St. Louis Maroons when they were champions of the world. Col. John I. Rogers, former part owner of the Philadelphia National League Club; Eugene P. Burt. for several years president of the Pacific Coast League; Samuel L. Wright, who at the time of his death was president of the Ohio and Pemsylvania League; John Morrow, who was one of the first presidents of the Southern League; James P. Walsh, owner of the Rockford team of the Wisconsin-Hilmois League, and McDonald Doughas, manager of the Stockton Club of the California State League.

Among the active players and former stars of the diamond who died during the year were Sam Wise, who was shortstop for the Boston Club when it won the National League championship in 1883; Jack O'Brien, catcher of the Philadelphia Athletics when that team won the American Association championship in the same years; James W. (Bug) Holliday, once he greatest outfielder playing baseball; Michael P. Hines, catch for the Boston Nationals in the early 30's; Allah M. Storke, who played all the infield positions with the Pittsburg Nationals during two season; Morris Critchley, an oid-time pitcher for Pittsburg; Patrick M. Downing, for several years a player with Southern League and Blue Grass League teams, and Joseph C. Hennessey, an outfielder last season on the Trenton, N.J., team. Dan McGann committed suicide hast week.

A recent purchase in the art world is commented upon thus by The Chicago Post: The friends of American art have decided on the purchase of John W. Alexander's large painting. "Sunlight," for the collection of the Art Institute, It would have been surprising if so distinguished a work should have returned to the artist, tho the size of the canvas, like that of the majority of pictures in the exhibition, dedicates it to the walls of a gallery. The composition centres on the standing figure of a beautiful woman in a flowing gown, the long folds and the grace of the pose creating a design of curving lines supporting subdued harmonies of green tones and rich undertones in an atmosphere of golden sunlight. It may be a portrait, but to the stranger its beauty is sufficient excuse for being.

It is difficult to analyze art like this, and, indeed, why should we analyze it or reduce it to a formula? Mr. Alexander has chosen his own way of painting, and so facile is his talent
