"What shall we do?" There was no doubt in his mind that if they had 100, 1000 acres adjoining Victoria along the E. & N., they could be divided into plots of forty acres and he would feel safe in guaranteeing to place a settler upon every hundred acres within twelve months.

Mr. Dennis then recounted the difficulties the company had encountered in colonizing the lands across the mountains. Rival railroads on the south, becoming alarmed at the formidable proportions of the movement, began to convey the impression that the area of settlement was near the North Pole and the climate terribly rigorous. In settling the committee to committee to interview the elimate terribly rigorous. In settling the climate terribly rigorous. This was done, and settlers were secured. This was the policy that ultimately would have to be adopted here. But he hoped the people wouldn't expect too much from the acquisition by the C. P. R. of the holdings on this Island. Of course it was likely that the advent of a big corporation like the C. P. R. would accomplish more in the rapid development of the land than the late owners, but it must not be expected all at once. They had only entered into possession on June 1st, but as could be seen they were going to do all they could to develop it intelligently without delay.

There was no question that if the C. P. R. could do with the land grant as railway company, and that both the tele-proposed they would have to extend the phone and railway companies should get proposed they would have to extend the Island road. The company in fact had refused to accept land.
