COCKE'S RETURN. The Earl's rejoinder to the Doctor was very short: "So let it be." There was not another word in the body of the letter; but there was appended to it a post-script almost equally short. "Lady Bracy will write to Mary and settle with her some period for her visit." And so it came to be understood by the Doctor, by Mrs. Wortle and by Mary herself that Mary was engaged to Lord Carstairs.

The Doctor, having so far arranged the matter thaving, as it were, laid a fairly firm grasp on the thing which had been offered to him—said little or nothing more on the subject, but turned his mind at once to that affair of Mr. and Mrs. Peacocke. It was evident to his wife, who probably alone understood the buoyancy of his.spirit, and his corresponding susceptibility to depression that he The Earl's rejoinder to the Doctor was

But in your defence you do not really touch the offence as to which you are, according to your own showing, accused. Painful as this first reintroduction had been there was not much more in it than that. No questions were asked and no explanations expected. It may be that Mrs. Stantiloup was affected with fresh moral horrors when she heard of the return and that the Bishop said that the Doctor was foolish and headstrong as ever. It may be that there was a good deal of talk about it in the Close at Broughton. But at the school there was very little more said about it than what has been stated above.

CESS.

In this last chapter of our short story I will venture to run rapidly over a few menths, so as to explain how the affairs of Bowlok arranged themselves up to the end of the current year. I cannot pretend that the reader shall know, as he ought to be made to know, the future fate and fortunes of our personages. They must be left still struggling. But then, is not such always in truth the case, even when the happy marriage has been celebrated?—even when in the course of two rapid years two normal children make their appearance to gladden the hearts of their parents?

This is the ittle given to Scotts Emul sion of Cod Liver Oil by many thousands who have takeit. It not only gives flesh and strength by virtue of its own nutritious properties, but creates an appetite for food. It is in a strength by virtue of its own nutritious properties, but creates an appetite for food.

Lieut. Gen. Geo. Digby Barker, the new Governor of the Bermudas, is 64 years of age. Heterved in the Persian campaign of 1857, and the course of two rapid years two normal children make their appearance to gladden the hearts of their parents.
