OPENING GUN IN RED CROSS CAMPAIGN FIRED LAST NIGHT

Major Burch of Toronto Spoke at War Banquet in Y. M. C. A. Telling of Life Overseas and Excoriating War Profiteers—Campaign in Readiness

"Can there be any greater curse on this country that told the men to go and then profiteered on their wives and children?"
In these ringing words, Major Burch of Toronto addressing two hundred British Red Cross workers in the Y. M. C. A. last evening, scoured the food profiteers, during an interesting and vivid lecture describing life on the firing line. The banquet was held prior to the campaign that commenced to-day, and an excellent repast with a war menu—was provided by the ladies of the Women's Patriotic League. Chairman Frank Cockshutt spoke briefly, and Secretary H. T. Watt outlined the purposes and methods of the campaign.

This apparently impossible obstacle was overcome by prolonged tunnelling until finally the positions were mined and blown up. Vivid and realistic was the description given of the gruesome spectacles of the captured trenches—of the ground churned and re-churned by the explosives of the opposing artilleries. The trenches at the Somme were not really trenches, merely streaks in the ooze, declared Major Burch. "The men who had gone into the depths of hell and drank the very dregs, after six hours rest, were forced to go back to strengthen the firing line. Why did they have to go back? That is a question for Canadians to ask themselves."

"The selfless life of the man who made a complete sacrifice for the cause that is supreme, who will give his life for one whom he does not know but who is lying near at hand, wounded and in need of succor—there is no greater story in his story than the similar sacrifice on Calvary. The man who counts his own life so little that he can give it freely for another, has approximated nearest the ideal of the Master—care not what his creed, or if he is any creed at all—at the last day when the great division is made, I want to stand with him. I'll take my chance there. That soul, relieved of the thin veneer of civilization, is God as near as I can know Him, the God of the human heart."

"One thing being accomplished by this war is the taking of the veneer from life. When our boys return, they will not mistake the reality for the veneer, and unless the reality confronts them when they return, they will remain a unit by themselves. The church which they revered, must be a real thing if it will hold faith and attraction for the man who has gone into Hell and returned."

"I believe in the men, and I tremble, too, for some things in this country—for the man who encouraged them to go, for the country that would not stand after their dependents—when they return to find that the purchasing power of the $110 a day has been reduced to forty cents, and that their children and wives are lacking milk and meat. "It's a shame, yes, a curse! And can there be a greater curse on the country that told the men to go and then profiteered on their wives and children."

In conclusion, I will say that the raising of funds for the British Red Cross is the noblest cause that man could have. The local campaign is your problem, not mine, but the men for whom you work are worthy of it."

Mr. F. Cockshutt, was of the opinion that the arrangements for the campaign had been excellently made, the organization was complete, the spirit of the workers was everything that could be desired, and the cause was all that a body of men could strive toward.

Mr. Cockshutt thought that there could be no cause more worthy or that would appeal more to the men of the city than the British Red Cross. It was the central organization that took care of our men at the front when they were wounded, sick and fatigued. The speaker was sure that the workers would be successful as they had the co-operation of every influential body of citizens in Brantford.

Secretary Harvey T. Watt briefly and concisely described the operation of the campaign.
The objective will be $25,000 and over $16,000 must be raised by voluntary contribution to receive the contribution from the city council of $10,000 that had been generously voted.

On Saturday the W. P. L. were to hold a tag day in the business section of the city, and the residential sections would be covered on Sunday by members of the G. W. V. A. and the A. R. Club who would make a house to house canvass and collect the envelopes that had been previously delivered by the postmen. On Thursday and Friday of this week
