We are glad to have C. A. located the first of the season suitable for the work. Confined just six months, my bees emerge from their winter quarters in perfect health. The hives and combs are pure and sweet, and to all appearance the bees would have remained contented and happy another month. I acted under the advice and with the assistance of of W. S. Hough, and the result is as near perfection as I could wish. I can winter 100 colonies or more in my cellar, just as well as the twelve were wintered. My bees do not appear to have been wintered at all, but go to work as quietly as if they had never been removed from their stands. Mr. Hough is right in his contention that stands and hives should be numbered and each hive returned in the spring characteristic converted the spring the success of failure of the operation depends solely upon the men the success of failure of the content work.
