The Morning Star.
JOS. E. COLLINS, EDITOR.
FREDERICTON, NOV. 19, 1878.

A Prediction.

What we today venture to predict, is a railroad inside three years, across the Island of Newfoundland. This project has been long spoken of in the circles of Canadian and home capitalists, but it has never assumed any practical form, nor upon these capitalists now do we rely for the building of the road. It will come from another quarter: that same broad statesmanlike mind that, moulded the fragments of the British North American possessions into form—into one whole, united by common ties and common sympathies,—speaking the same language, and acknowledging one common ancestry—he it is upon whom we rely for the building of the road.

This announcement immediately gives complexion to our politics, both as a citizen of the great Dominion, and as a native of Newfoundland. We have not yet, it is true, had the experience of many politicians wearing gray beards, who look upon the proposed Union as a blasting spectre to the interests of Newfoundland; yet we lay claim to having had some experience. Before leaving our native country, now four years ago, we looked upon confederation as a threatened curse, upon its promoters as enemies to the country. We have changed our mind: travel and residence in many parts of the Dominion, have shown us that to Newfoundland confederation would mean a blessing. How, we intend to show in subsequent articles.

Then it is through such a project as confederation, that we shall see the railroad built. Unaided, the colonial government can never do it; their $20,000—we believe that is the sum,—granted as a subsidy per annum, will not induce companies to build certain lengths of the road. Four years ago, some thirty or forty thousand dollars—we speak again from memory,—were spent on a survey by Sandford Fleming, and nothing since has been done. The line is there, the trees yet rear their lofty heads in primitive quiet, the rivers with their swarms of salmon flow on through millions of acres of country fresh from nature's hand. Thousands of square miles of land give forth its unsown crop, and naught stirs in that wide and fertile region between St. George's Bay and St. John's, but towns of beaver with their old fashioned manses, otter mink and muskrats playing in their swampy homes, and stately deer that roam the wide forest and the open plain. And so this will remain for all time while the local government has to depend upon its own aid. By confederation the road can alone be built, and this scheme could we but read the secrets of Sir John's mind we should find written there.

The railroad will be 280 miles long and will extend from St. John's the capital, to St. George's Bay. Of the fertility and feasibility of this route, locally considered, we shall speak in another issue. Nor shall we here answer the silly objections of "railroad accidents," "thick fogs" &c., urged by Mr. Chas. Fox Bennett and other prominent opposition men of the Island, against the road.

But beside the local advantages its general feature possesses merits transcending any other line in the Dominion. It will form the wanting link in the great high-road of commerce between the Old and New World. Some hundreds of miles will be saved, and a more speedy and equally as safe transit will be ensured. By steamers from Queenstown, Ireland, freight and passengers will be conveyed to St. John's, which would then be the Dominion Depot, thence by rail across the island in nine or ten hours. St. George's Bay would be the terminus, and thence a line of steamers would ply across the Gulf of St. Lawrence to Pasbebiac Bay, to which port, a branch of railway would be built, connecting with the Intercolonial. Thus the communication would be established, making in all, the time between the Old and New World as follows: From Pasbebiac Bay and St. George's Bay, by steamer 24 hours, from St. George's Bay to St. John's in 10 hours, from St. John's to Queenstown, six days, making in all, seven days and a half. We shall return to this subject.

Extermination of Kings.

Society is in a bad state. From Spain in the west to the icy bounds of the Russians territory in the east, the corruption every now and then comes to the surface. Germany is the nursery, and the evil plant fostered is Socialism. It is whispered in the ear of the peasant and grows among the masses. The feeling spreads, then intensifies, and it arms the assassin. Hoedel and Nobelling are its foremost apostles, and they strike at the prime root of the state. Against the life of the Emperor their hand is raised. Then a calm falls over the social sea, and easy "is the head that wears a crown." But what do we again hear. With the electric flash news reach us from Spain. The socialistic monster has risen there and aimed a blow at the young King's life. He is defeated and handed over to the authorities. We then take breath for, think we, in history before we read no such stories as these; security to the crowned head must now follow. But scarce have we begun to breathe the air of security when we pale as we read that too in Italy the poison seeds have borne fruit. Only yesterday was the King of Italy while surrounded by his courtiers and subjects, attacked by a wretch who endeavored to stab him. Courage nerves the royal arm and he strikes at and defends himself against his would-be assassin.

Nor is this all. In Russia socialists organize with all the dread characteristics of the "sworn twelve" with all the secrecy of Freemasons. For many years, the Czar has at night seen daggers behind his couch, at day a sword more dread than Damocles, hangs over his head. Let us look nearer home. In the fair America, "the land of the free and the home of the brave," Ben. Butler heads his "working-men" only another name for socialists. Kearney the vulgar fanatic lectures an excited mob from the platform, and tells them he will "capture the fort." Both he and Butler would bring capital, gagged and bound before labor. The people saw through them, and they were rejected. Socialism is an evil wide spread: Demagoguism and Fanaticism are its parents, Unreason is its tutor,—Misery, Rapine, Plunder and Murder are its offspring. The wisdom and staid principles of society alone can crush it out.

The Ameer and the War.

It would now seem indeed as if the "purple testament of bleeding war" were about being opened in Afghanistan. On the morning of the 20th the British troops march for the land of the Ameer. Long and wearisome must that march be, fraught with dangers, if not from untrained Afghans at least from the natural obstacles to be met in the way. The passage of the troops will be through the Khyber Pass, the only route through the mountains to Jellalabad and other strong holds of the Ameer. The mountains through which the pass runs are 15,000 feet high, and inaccessible. The width of the pass varies from two hundred and ninety to forty feet. Till beyond Ali Musjid, a distance of two miles and a half, the pass retains an almost impassable character; but then it enters Lala Beg Valley, about six miles in length. Then again it pierces the very bowels of the mountains, and down through its echoing depths the sunlight scarcely struggles. Two camels abreast can here with difficulty get past. Then the way leads over the rugged sides of an almost inaccessible mountain, and called the Lundi Khana.

Over this route guns could with great difficulty be dragged, but if we contemplate Napoleon dragging his cannon over the icy and rugged Alps we cannot think the task an impossible one here for the English. It is important to be on friendly relations with the tribes holding these passes. By-the-by they are a kind of sovereign princes not acknowledging even the Ameer's claims to their concession or friendship. At present it is thought they will join hands against the English whom they regard as a common enemy of their country.

These are some of the difficulties the English army will have to meet.

Mr. Juglin Confesses

The Freeman is not blind in its error nor unrepentant. It insinuated that we "lightly" made heavy charges against a certain dead and buried politician of York, but finding our charges borne out by outside proof it hastens to make amends. Thus it speaks:—
"We never had a high opinion of Dr. Dow, but we were surprised and shocked when the Fredericton Star stated that he had withdrawn the petition against the election of Mr. Fraser and Mr. Colter for a price, and we protested against such a charge being made against a public man unless it were accompanied by proof. Indeed we thought it incredible that any man who had represented one of the counties of this Province for so many years could be guilty of an act so disgraceful. On the lastings on Saturday last, however, Mr. Blair, one of the gentlemen who resigned after the general election, and who were again candidates, repeated this charge most circumstantially. "It was stated that Dr. Dow received $500 from Mr. Colter. According to the newspaper reports Mr. Colter stated this, and Dr. Dow admitted that he did receive the money. He made any exculpatory explanation we have not seen it. The Dr. paid the electors of York the extraordinary compliment of seeking their suffrages after all these statements were made."

All of which goes to show that what even great minds often think "incredible" may, nevertheless, be true. Mr. Juglin thought the poor wretch incapable of such degradation, but we knew him to be guilty of it.

The Dumb Speakeh.

The tongue of the Telegraph has at last been loosed, and it has spoken. But alas, what a change! Its utterances are no more that of the government oracle, but of one who is "almost-persuaded" to join a new sect. Mr. Elder has for reasons, which we believe the STAR has already set forth, turned his back upon the Government and stepped in with the opposition. Nor can we blame Mr. Elder for this. To the Telegraph in a great measure is the present government indebted for an existence: When bitter days and "evil tongues" fell upon the party, there was always consolation to be found under the Telegraph's wing, and for all this he has been slighted. Mr. Elder inadvertently lets drop the reason why he does not see perfection in the Frazer-Landry government. He says they have made it a point—
"To bestow special marks of favor on the constituencies which went most directly into opposition to them,—the most remarkable illustration of this fact being the County of Westmoreland."

In other words, he charges them with ingratitude; the very thing we laid to their account some days ago. And not the least of this "ingratitude" must Mr. Elder feel—that part toward himself. Yet it will be difficult for him to find fault with such a course, having endorsed so freely as he did the "reconstruction" some months ago.

A monster with a lion's head has been seen in the Ottawa river of late. Would that be an aid-camp to the "Lions" soon to be at the Dominion capital?

The Americans, it is said, have decided to pay the award to save their national honor. The Times says if they don't England will no go to war about it.
