

HELEN MOIR
—OR—
LOVE AND HONOUR.

A TALE OF THE CLYDE.
CHAPTER XXIV.

SQUIRE OAKLEY OF OAKLEY ORANGE—A VISIT TO MANGLES THE GAMBLER.
"Oh, bless my soul! that's quite a different story. Assist you! Of course, I'll assist you to the utmost in my power. How long do you say it is since the affair happened?"

"Twenty years."
"A poor chance, sir—a poor chance. I was going the round of the hells then, and know how likely it is your friend was done as you suspect, for at that time there were a lot of singers up to the worst of devilry."

"Singers?" said Edwin, interrogatively.
"Aye, singers—fleece—what you like to call them. Gamblers, sir, are just made up of two classes—those who fleece, and those who are fleeced. Now, at the time you mention there was a pack of as secondarily fleecers as ever swarmed about London. But then, bless you, a few years does for them, too; and it's a thousand chances to one if those connected with your friend's transaction are still to be found above the soil."

"That is just what I said, and what I fear," remarked the lawyer.
"Ah, Weggate, you know," said the Squire.

"Did you, for instance, know a frequenter of gaming houses named Jordan—Philip Jordan?" asked Edwin.
"Jordan—Jordan," repeated Squire Oakley in a reflective tone. "No, I don't remember the name."

"Or Mangles?"
"Mangles!" shouted the Squire vociferously. "I should just think I do know him. Why, he was my chief singer, and he singed me pretty close to the skin too. Weggate, you know."

"I know," assented the lawyer, "that you were pretty closely singed, but of course I know nothing of the operators."
"Then Mangles, I tell you, was one, and the earnestest of the lot. Had he to do with your friend's unfortunate business, Mr. Allerton?"

"He was the man to whom the money was lost."
"Then he cheated him, by jingo?"
"Very likely, though this would not be difficult to do, for my uncle—I may tell you, Squire Oakley, it was uncle who was the victim—knew as little of gambling as I do."

"Ah, I see—a lamb among wolves. Oh, I know—I know. Then I say distinctly Mangles cheated him."
"That, however," continued Edwin, "is not of so much importance—in fact, of no importance at all—to this investigation. It is the truth regarding the signing of the bill that I wish to arrive at, and Mangles can no doubt disclose it. Have you any notion, if he is alive, or where he may be found?"

"I could have answered both questions satisfactorily some time ago, for the fellow has had the impudence to apply repeatedly to me for help. Of course the inevitable fate overtook him. Through impudence and other irregularities of his, he grew unfit for his work—such work as it was—his hand grew so shaky he could not even cheat at play; he descended from a player to a mere marker—then broke up so much that he could not even do that, and he became a miserable besotted longer-on, till, as a nuisance, he was kicked out altogether. Well, after that—would you believe it?—he had the impudence to apply to me for help—to me whom he had cheated out of hundreds, and did his best to ruin. By Jove, he did indeed. Weggate, you know Equal, no, you don't know that, but I do."

"Yes," responded Weggate with a smile, "and though I am no betting man, as you know, I'll wager a bottle of my best port that you responded to his appeal."
"Well, I did."
"I knew it."

"It's not a pleasant thing to know that a fellow creature is a singer, even though he has been a singer, and has singed you too; so I couldn't refuse him a mite."
"And therefore encouraged him to apply again?" added the lawyer.
"Equal, that's true; for he did apply again, and, in fact, so often that I got tired of his old attentances. He didn't seem to approve of that suggestion, for his application kept coming to the Grange till, finding I took no notice of them, they were dropped."

"But you will know where he is to be found?" cried Edwin, eagerly.
"Not I. It's ten to one if he is still alive. Let me see. It's—why, it's three years or more since he gave up sending his applications."

"And how did these applications come? What address did he give?"
"A public-house called the 'Half-Moon,' in the New Cut. We may hear of him there; and I'll be glad to accompany you if you think of going, but there is really little hope of finding him above ground. Weggate you know."

"I don't think the chance is great, but I rather suppose Mr. Allerton will wish to try it."
"And that at once," said Edwin. "So, as the Squire has kindly offered to accompany me to the place, I propose that we take a cab immediately. And, in case we should find him, as the Squire says, 'above ground,' we shall be the better of your assistance at the interview, Mr. Weggate, if you have an hour or two to spare."

The lawyer rapidly disposed of his remaining unpursed letters, and in little more than a quarter of an hour the four were being driven along the thoroughfares towards the New Cut.

A WORLD IN TROUBLE.—The world is in trouble, nations are convulsed; thrones are trembling; governments are agitated; people are excited, and the whole social organization appears to be sensitively influenced by something promontory of a great change; now for nervousness there is nothing like the "Canadian Pain Destroyer," which also cures rheumatism, neuralgia, the doloureux, cramps and pains in the stomach, &c. Price 25 cents per bottle. Sold by all medicine dealers.

POOR HONERS.—There are thousands of poor honers dragging out a miserable existence, suffering from a variety of diseases, rendering them almost worthless, that would be restored to a healthy and sound condition, and a value given to them of which their owners never dreamed, would they but use the means within their reach. From one to three packages of "Darley's Condition Powders and Arabian Heave Remedy" will in all cases produce a satisfactory result; hundreds have testified to the fact. Remember the name, and see that the signature of Hurd & Co. is on each package. Northrop & Lyman, Newcastle, Ontario, proprietors for Canada. Sold by all medicine dealers.

Which of the Pelee island are you from?" asked a visitor of one of the
