It is at this very moment a matter of disassion in Canada whether a treaty of reci procity should not be concluded with the United States, and the result of the deliberation may very possibly be an admission of the manufactures of New England into the Dominion under lighter duties than the manufactures of Great Britain. If the Canadian Ministry come to the con clusion that such an arrangement is for the penefit of the country will the Colonial Office advise the Crown to disallow the negotiations? HISTORY REPEATS ITSELF.

The Cry of "Disloyalty" Always Raised Against Reforms in Canada.

How Class Legislators Have Tried to Sustain Abuses in the Past.

(Hon. Oliver Mowat at Toronto. So much is said of this Leyalty as an answer to our demant for improved trade relations with our neighbors, to our efforts to obtain some method of relief for our citizens of all classes, that I occasionally find not very refer to the control of citizens of all classes, that I occasionally find, not very often, but here and there that some good Reformer has been misled by this craft, and I would like to say a word or two about this. This cry of loyalty, this cry of British connection as standing in the way of some great reform, is not now made for the first time. We have had experience of it, and we have had experience of it, and we have learned that it may be made in direct opposition to the interests of the people, and where there is no foundation for the suggestion that the measure will shake British connection in the smallest degree. One of the carliest recollections that I have is the struggle for responsible government. (Hear, struggle for responsible government. (Hear, hear.) Not many of you, perhaps, are old enough to know that the struggle for responsible government was met by this very cry of disloyalty.

A voice—In 1841.

Yes, in 1841, as my aged friend over there remembers, and for years before 1841 there was the same cry. It was said that unless you allow the Governor sent here from the old land to rule the country, if you require him to conform his rule to what, the people's representatives here will say, you might as well not be a colony of fongland at all. It is essential to that relation which you wish to continue that the British Governor should have this power in his hand representing the Queen. Ultimately, however, the people of this country became satisfied that responsible government was a safe thing to insist upon, and was necessary in the interests of the country. And now what do we find? Why, there is not one man in all Canada but feels that responsible government did not have this desirable Reitshe convenience that is did not shake Reitshe convenience that the did not shake Reitshe Reitshe Reitshe convenience that the did not shake Reitshe Reitsh there is not one man in all Canada but feels that responsible government did not shake British connections; that it did not shake the loyality to England, but that, on the contrary, it made many loyal who were before disloyal, and it strengthened British connection more than any other measure could have strengthened it. Our Conservative friends of that day were wrong when they said that British connection would not be safe without a resident Governor. Take, again, our municipal institutions, in regard to which the same cry was raised. They said, "Don't esinstitutions, in regard to which the same cry was raised. They said, "Don't establish these institutions; they will become sucking republics if you give them to the people." It was not for some time that the loyal people of this country and this Province—for I am speaking especially of Ontario—ventured to sanction the adoption of municipal institutions of the extreme character which we now enjoy. But at length after much discussion the loyal people of Ontario came to the conclusion that those institutions were quite safe institutions; that British connection would not suffer from them; that they were not sucking republics and would not lead to annextion; and our experience has been that far from being sucking republics or leading to separation from the old land they are a source of strength to British connection; as ource of strength to British connection; a source of strength to British connection; a source of strength to British connection; a source of strength to British connection; that can be named to secure the best interests of the country and any other provision that can be named to secure the best interests of the country and its continued connection with the land from which we and our fathers all come. Then the State Church was another thing, and the secularization of the clergy reserves is another. The people of this country have from time to time been met with this cry when some great measure was proclaimed and put before the country, and it has invariably been shown that no foundation existed for it; that there was a strength of loyalty in the country far beyond that which our opponents now give us credit for. any other provision that can be named to secure the best interests of the country and

It will be a great pleasure to the friends f John G. Whittier to hear that he is better and slowly convalescing from a second attack of the grip. Last winter Mr. Whit tier had a narrow escape from this danger ous disease, which enfeebled his walk and general strength. Mr. Whittier is at the home of his cousins, Joseph and Gertrude Cortland, in High street, Newburyport, Mass.

Sir Morell Mackenzie's household exenses were very great. He kept sixteen servants, besides a private coach for himself and another for his wife, and spent every and another for his wife, and spent every cent of his $60,000 yearly income. Both the distinguished doctor and his wife were very fond of society, and their home in London was the resort of brilliant people. It was a rare thing for a caller to find them alone in the evening, and even then they were in full evening dress, Mrs. Mackenzie blazing with diamonds. The doctor's three daughters are said to be very handsome girls and all as fond of society as their parents were. parents were.

LONDON VOTERS' LIST APPEA The Judges' Opinions.

The Jugges' Opinions.

[By Telephone to the Advertiser.]

Chief Justice Haggerty, in giving he decision, says: I am of opinion that a the facts before us in this case we are not called upon to decide the very serious question whether the Court of Queen's Bench damus. The object of the writ of manfully attained, and it the writ has been it will not affect the purpose of the case or the final disposal of the claims of the appellants. The chief justice then goe on to say he sees no reaso for the court entering upon the purely technical inquiry involving no rights ye undisposed of. The learned judge then goe on to speak of the insufficiency of the aleged notices. He discusses the poin whether the original notice was sufficien or not, and after reviewing the English decisions he thinks the cuntramnt genuch assistance from them. The English acts differ from ours. Under our acts he thinks the revising officer has power to amend the notice of objection. Then, having so done, he thinks the amended notic is sufficient. His final judgment is that the appeal should not be entertained. The court refuses to entertain the appeal.

Judge Burton says: As the revising officer has acted upon the mandamus an has not seen fit to contest the jurisdiction of the court the granting of the writ is no longer a matter of any consequence. He goes on to say he has no doubt that the original notice was sufficient. He expresse no opinion on the amended notice, as it was not before the Queen's Bench Divisions. Court, and for this reason he thinks the court should not entertain the appeal.

Judge McLennan said they could not entertain the question of jurisdiction, as writ has been acted upon. He goes on to say he has no doubt that the original notice was sufficient. The notice must be read in connection with the list which it refers, as it and the full notice must be taken together.

Judge Osler says the writ has been obeyed, its force is spent, and this court cannot undo its effect. He refuses to express any opinion as to the sufficiency of t the notices, as the matter is wholly in the jurisdiction of the County Court judge, and he has already the obiter dictum of the Queen's Bench Divisional Court. On the ground that the force of the writ of mandamus was spent the appeal should be dismissed.
