

228, 230, 232 DUNDAS STREET.

WHISKARD'S.

LONDON'S RECOGNIZED CHEAPEST STORE.

This Store Will be Open Every Evening Until Christmas.

We'll Make it a Memorable Christmas Shopping Season.

The chances presented at WHISKARD'S, London's recognized shopping center, are greater and grander than ever, prices precluding the possibilities of competition. Everything suitable and sensible for giving awaits you, more here to choose from now, more selling space, more salespeople, more facilities for quick and comfortable trading, and better than all else, the lowest prices we've ever quoted.

HOLIDAY PRICES ON MILLINERY.

25 dozen of LADIES' SAILORS, WALKING HATS, and other styles, also new lines of Misses' Hats, in different styles and colors, worth from 50c to $1.50, all to go at one popular price, 29c each. See our East Window.

THERE ISN'T A LADY within reach of this store but will find it a matter of personal interest to keep in touch with the doings here.

MILES OF RIBBON TO PICK FROM.

OUR RIBBON SELLING IS SOMETHING phenomenal just now.

Satin Ribbon, 1c, 2c, 3c yard.
Silk Ribbons, 2c, 3c, 4c, 5c yard.
Wide Fancy Ribbons, from 5c yard to 50c.

Knit Underwear for Ladies and Children.

Always useful and acceptable. Good for Christmas giving.

SPLENDID LINE LADIES' VESTS, open front, 15c.
Very Heavy and Warm, extra goods, 25c.
Ladies' All-wool Vests, 45c each.
Ladies' Drawers, 25c to 75c pair.
Children's Warm Vests, from 10c to 45c.

Holiday Handkerchiefs.

PAST YEARS have demonstrated that HEKE IS HANDKERCHIEF HEADQUARTERS. In this year's sale there are greater assortments, greater values and greater incentives for early buying than ever.

150 dozen Fancy Handkerchiefs, 25c dozen.
Ladies' Hemstitched, drawn thread, 5c each.
Ladies' Lawn Handkerchiefs, lace edged, 5c each.
Ladies' Jap Silk, embroidered, 7c, 10c.

Holiday Pocketbooks--Ladies' Chateleine Bags.

Pocketbooks, 5c, 10c, 15c each.
Ladies' Card Pocketbooks, 25c each.
Ladies' Leather Pocketbooks, 35c to 50c.
Ladies' Chateleine Bags, 25c each.

Bottled Perfumery--Put up in ancient-looking pottery bottles; the bottle is more than the price; elegant Perfumery; something new, only 15c bottle.

FREE TO BALD HEADS.
We will mail on application, free information how to grow hair upon a bald head, stop falling hair and remove scalp diseases. Address: Allen in Medicine Dispensary, Dept. U. E. Box 779, Cincinnati, Ohio. ywt

CURES
COLIC, CHOLERA, CHOLERA-MORBUS, DIARRHOEA, DYSENTERY,
And all SUMMER COMPLAINTS of Children and Adults.
PRICE, 35c. Beware of Imitations.

City Bindery...

BOCK & FYSH,
Formerly of F. H. Kordes Bindery, now open for all kinds of work.
436, RICHMOND STREET

BELL PIANOS
Pronounced by
R. Watkin-Mills
to be ABSOLUTELY
the most elegant instruments he had seen anywhere.
Bell Piano Warehouses,
18 Dundas Street, London.

EPPS'S COCOA

ENGLISH BREAKFAST COCOA
Possesses the following distinctive merits:
DELICACY OF FLAVOR.
SUPERIORITY IN QUALITY.

GRATIFYING AND COMFORTING
to the LIVER and DIGESTION.
NUTRITIVE QUALITIES UNRIVALED
In Quinine-Flavored Tonic Only.
Prepared by JAMES EPPS & CO., Ltd.
Homeopathic Chemists, London, England.

A friend is he who smiles when others frown, and stoops to give his hand when one is down.

A Unique Entertainment

At the First Methodist Church - Given by the Sunday School - An Excellent Programme.

The anniversary entertainment of the First Methodist Sunday school, held last night, was perhaps the most successful in the school's history. The galleries were reserved for the host of little ones, and the body of the edifice was filled to overflowing with the parents and friends. The choir and church orchestra added greatly to the success of the evening. Mr. Charles Barnes, superintendent of the school, presided, and Mr. J. T. Wokot, officiated as leader of the choir. The programme was a rare one. After devotional exercises, Mr. J. E. Elliott, the Sunday school secretary, read his annual report. It showed 751 scholars on the roll--17 officers, 62 teachers, 330 girls and 222 boys--an increase of 100 in membership. The total number of verses recited was 26,797. Of these, 9,586 were recited by the boys, and 17,211 by the girls. The junior primary class contained 139--43 girls and 96 boys--and the work done was credit to the teachers. The following scholars have a brilliant record for attendance: Florence Bellon, Lily Harding, Nora Larsch, Ethel Teasdale, Eva Smith, Pansy Gerry, Dorothy Gunn, Thomas Walker, Percy Crouch, Charles Fessenden, E. Bland, Fred Harding, George Little, Richard Toy, Willie Brock, Ernest Little and Stuart Gunn. The senior primary class of Miss Ware, and the young ladies' Bible class, taught by Mrs. (Dr.) Eccles, together with the normal class, recently organized for the training of Sunday school teachers, came in for a good deal of praise. Miss Webb's class was especially mentioned. There was nothing in the report regarding the school's finances, or from the libraries, regarding the books. Financial reference was made to the two former members of the school who had been removed by the cold hand of death, little Pearl Richmond and Miss Jenny Ford, who died in China. A selection by the orchestra followed the report.

"Tiny Snowflakes," a kindergarten rendition by eighteen little girls dressed in white, was heartily applauded. The following participated: Mildred Bustin, Edna Chapman, Mary Burgess, Rosie Harrison, Edna Yealland, Donna Wheeler, Hazel Cocks, Ethel Teasdale, Eva Smith, Olive Smyth, Florence Bellon, Katie Tume, Ruby Sussex, Merrie Wheeler, Elsie Chapman, Marjorie Hobbs, Lillian Lytle, Constance Hobbs. "The Poetman" was also given by the several little ladies. The recitation by Master E. Dillon, "The Boys of the Orange Home," was very effective. It was also the trio, "Gracious Spirit, Love Divine," by the Misses Wilson. "Whistling Tom" was rendered by little boys whom were: Geraldine Matthews, Irene Parker, Winnie McBroome, E. Johnston, Olive Sussex, Leona Vacker, Mary Soper, and Bella Beech. The arch of fame was the feature of the evening, and reflects great credit on Mr. A. S. Scream, who trained the participants for their respective parts. Miss Eva Fields excelled as "Christianity's Queen." The universe king was Mr. Fred Scream. Russia was represented by Clifford Mara; the United States by Will Olinsted; Germany, by George Phelps; India, by Chester Belton; France, by Edgar Barnes; Italy, by Lee Boyd; Austria, by Leonard Parker; Japan, by Fred Adams; Queen of Great Britain, by Miss Hattie Powell; Miss Canada, by Miss Melba McBroome. One twelve soldiers of the cross were Miss Georgina Mills, Ethel Munnoch, Josephine Spencer, Elsie Hobbs, L. Abbott, Annie Woods, Ethel Marge, Myrtle Wilson, E. Parker, Ada Crouch, Bella Bland, and Elva McBroome. At the conclusion, Mr. A. Scream was presented with a handsome bouquet of roses by two of the lady scholars, Mr. Scream and those who had the affair in charge merited the good wishes of all, and at the close congratulations were in order.

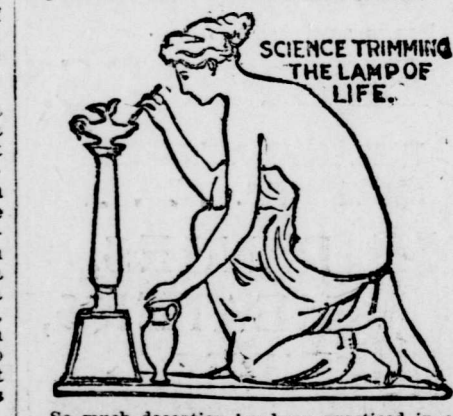

Marie Mustard is the name under which a London 8-year-old pianoforte prodigy is braving the world.

Free Trial To Any Honest Man

The Foremost Medical Company in the World in the Cure of Weak Men Makes this Offer.

HEALTH AND ENERGY ASSURED.
HAPPY MARRIAGE, GOOD TEMPER, LONG LIFE.

In all the world to-day--in all the history of the world--no doctor nor institution has treated and restored so many men as has the famous ERIE MEDICAL CO. of Buffalo, N. Y.

So much deception has been practiced in advertising this grand old company now for the first time makes this startling offer: They will send their costly and magically effective medicine and a whole month's course of restorative remedies, positively on trial without expense to any honest man, and return the money if not a dollar need be advanced--not a penny paid--until results are known to and acknowledged by the patient. The Erie Medical Company's medicine and remedies have been tried and found to be all over the world, till every man has heard of them. They restore or create strength, vigor, healthy tissue and new life. They quickly stop drains on the system that sap the energy. They cure nervousness, despondency and all the effects of evil habits, excesses, overwork, etc. They give full strength, development and tone to every portion and organ of the body. Failure is impossible and age is no barrier. This "Erie" without expense, is offered limited by the company to a short time, and application must be made at once. No C. O. D. scheme, no bogus philanthropy nor deception, no exposure--a clear business proposition by a company of high financial and professional standing. Write to the ERIE MEDICAL COMPANY, BUFFALO, N. Y., and refer to seeing the account of their offer in this paper.

Interesting Discovery.

Hunters at Walkerton Come Across a Curious Archaeological Find.

A Petrified Spring and What it Contained.

Walkerton, Ont., Dec. 21.--A party of hunters from Walkerton came across a curious archaeological "find" at the "Blue Springs" three miles east of here, while out looking for game some time ago. The "Blue Springs" are a small stream emptying into the Sauk river at Maple Hill, and consist chiefly of a pool of unknown depth, the overflow of which, on its way to the river, has worn into the ground a number of holes not much larger than puddle holes, but all of which have the remarkable quality of turning into any substance that falls into them. While stooping to get a drink on the day in question one of the hunters, while in the act of drinking, suddenly gave an unearthly yell, and sprang up, excitedly declared that he had seen a ghost in the spring. Mr. J. P. Klemf, proprietor of the Royal Hotel, Walkerton, courageously descended to the spring, and found that he was not afraid of ghosts, and turning back, unearthed the object that alarmed his companion. It proved to be a perfect human face turned to stone. The back part of the head is gone, and inside the skull is a considerable growth of roots and plants. Mr. Klemf brought it to town, where it has since formed an object of interest to the curious. Dr. J. J. Wason, D.D.S., purchased it, and is taking it to Buffalo this week for examination by the Archaeological Society of that city. The features are those of a squaw, and the most tenable theory of those who examined it here is that in ages long gone by the owner fell on her face in the pool, and died there. The body of course decayed, and the living waters of the pool. All manner of curious speculations are hazarded as to the possible personality of the owner of the face. The streets of Thebes three thousand years ago, the owner of this skull was once a human being, who in all probability tramped through the forests of the world before the white man appeared upon the scene.

While stooping to get a drink on the day in question one of the hunters, while in the act of drinking, suddenly gave an unearthly yell, and sprang up, excitedly declared that he had seen a ghost in the spring. Mr. J. P. Klemf, proprietor of the Royal Hotel, Walkerton, courageously descended to the spring, and found that he was not afraid of ghosts, and turning back, unearthed the object that alarmed his companion. It proved to be a perfect human face turned to stone. The back part of the head is gone, and inside the skull is a considerable growth of roots and plants. Mr. Klemf brought it to town, where it has since formed an object of interest to the curious. Dr. J. J. Wason, D.D.S., purchased it, and is taking it to Buffalo this week for examination by the Archaeological Society of that city. The features are those of a squaw, and the most tenable theory of those who examined it here is that in ages long gone by the owner fell on her face in the pool, and died there. The body of course decayed, and the living waters of the pool. All manner of curious speculations are hazarded as to the possible personality of the owner of the face. The streets of Thebes three thousand years ago, the owner of this skull was once a human being, who in all probability tramped through the forests of the world before the white man appeared upon the scene.

While stooping to get a drink on the day in question one of the hunters, while in the act of drinking, suddenly gave an unearthly yell, and sprang up, excitedly declared that he had seen a ghost in the spring. Mr. J. P. Klemf, proprietor of the Royal Hotel, Walkerton, courageously descended to the spring, and found that he was not afraid of ghosts, and turning back, unearthed the object that alarmed his companion. It proved to be a perfect human face turned to stone. The back part of the head is gone, and inside the skull is a considerable growth of roots and plants. Mr. Klemf brought it to town, where it has since formed an object of interest to the curious. Dr. J. J. Wason, D.D.S., purchased it, and is taking it to Buffalo this week for examination by the Archaeological Society of that city. The features are those of a squaw, and the most tenable theory of those who examined it here is that in ages long gone by the owner fell on her face in the pool, and died there. The body of course decayed, and the living waters of the pool. All manner of curious speculations are hazarded as to the possible personality of the owner of the face. The streets of Thebes three thousand years ago, the owner of this skull was once a human being, who in all probability tramped through the forests of the world before the white man appeared upon the scene.

While stooping to get a drink on the day in question one of the hunters, while in the act of drinking, suddenly gave an unearthly yell, and sprang up, excitedly declared that he had seen a ghost in the spring. Mr. J. P. Klemf, proprietor of the Royal Hotel, Walkerton, courageously descended to the spring, and found that he was not afraid of ghosts, and turning back, unearthed the object that alarmed his companion. It proved to be a perfect human face turned to stone. The back part of the head is gone, and inside the skull is a considerable growth of roots and plants. Mr. Klemf brought it to town, where it has since formed an object of interest to the curious. Dr. J. J. Wason, D.D.S., purchased it, and is taking it to Buffalo this week for examination by the Archaeological Society of that city. The features are those of a squaw, and the most tenable theory of those who examined it here is that in ages long gone by the owner fell on her face in the pool, and died there. The body of course decayed, and the living waters of the pool. All manner of curious speculations are hazarded as to the possible personality of the owner of the face. The streets of Thebes three thousand years ago, the owner of this skull was once a human being, who in all probability tramped through the forests of the world before the white man appeared upon the scene.

While stooping to get a drink on the day in question one of the hunters, while in the act of drinking, suddenly gave an unearthly yell, and sprang up, excitedly declared that he had seen a ghost in the spring. Mr. J. P. Klemf, proprietor of the Royal Hotel, Walkerton, courageously descended to the spring, and found that he was not afraid of ghosts, and turning back, unearthed the object that alarmed his companion. It proved to be a perfect human face turned to stone. The back part of the head is gone, and inside the skull is a considerable growth of roots and plants. Mr. Klemf brought it to town, where it has since formed an object of interest to the curious. Dr. J. J. Wason, D.D.S., purchased it, and is taking it to Buffalo this week for examination by the Archaeological Society of that city. The features are those of a squaw, and the most tenable theory of those who examined it here is that in ages long gone by the owner fell on her face in the pool, and died there. The body of course decayed, and the living waters of the pool. All manner of curious speculations are hazarded as to the possible personality of the owner of the face. The streets of Thebes three thousand years ago, the owner of this skull was once a human being, who in all probability tramped through the forests of the world before the white man appeared upon the scene.

While stooping to get a drink on the day in question one of the hunters, while in the act of drinking, suddenly gave an unearthly yell, and sprang up, excitedly declared that he had seen a ghost in the spring. Mr. J. P. Klemf, proprietor of the Royal Hotel, Walkerton, courageously descended to the spring, and found that he was not afraid of ghosts, and turning back, unearthed the object that alarmed his companion. It proved to be a perfect human face turned to stone. The back part of the head is gone, and inside the skull is a considerable growth of roots and plants. Mr. Klemf brought it to town, where it has since formed an object of interest to the curious. Dr. J. J. Wason, D.D.S., purchased it, and is taking it to Buffalo this week for examination by the Archaeological Society of that city. The features are those of a squaw, and the most tenable theory of those who examined it here is that in ages long gone by the owner fell on her face in the pool, and died there. The body of course decayed, and the living waters of the pool. All manner of curious speculations are hazarded as to the possible personality of the owner of the face. The streets of Thebes three thousand years ago, the owner of this skull was once a human being, who in all probability tramped through the forests of the world before the white man appeared upon the scene.

While stooping to get a drink on the day in question one of the hunters, while in the act of drinking, suddenly gave an unearthly yell, and sprang up, excitedly declared that he had seen a ghost in the spring. Mr. J. P. Klemf, proprietor of the Royal Hotel, Walkerton, courageously descended to the spring, and found that he was not afraid of ghosts, and turning back, unearthed the object that alarmed his companion. It proved to be a perfect human face turned to stone. The back part of the head is gone, and inside the skull is a considerable growth of roots and plants. Mr. Klemf brought it to town, where it has since formed an object of interest to the curious. Dr. J. J. Wason, D.D.S., purchased it, and is taking it to Buffalo this week for examination by the Archaeological Society of that city. The features are those of a squaw, and the most tenable theory of those who examined it here is that in ages long gone by the owner fell on her face in the pool, and died there. The body of course decayed, and the living waters of the pool. All manner of curious speculations are hazarded as to the possible personality of the owner of the face. The streets of Thebes three thousand years ago, the owner of this skull was once a human being, who in all probability tramped through the forests of the world before the white man appeared upon the scene.

While stooping to get a drink on the day in question one of the hunters, while in the act of drinking, suddenly gave an unearthly yell, and sprang up, excitedly declared that he had seen a ghost in the spring. Mr. J. P. Klemf, proprietor of the Royal Hotel, Walkerton, courageously descended to the spring, and found that he was not afraid of ghosts, and turning back, unearthed the object that alarmed his companion. It proved to be a perfect human face turned to stone. The back part of the head is gone, and inside the skull is a considerable growth of roots and plants. Mr. Klemf brought it to town, where it has since formed an object of interest to the curious. Dr. J. J. Wason, D.D.S., purchased it, and is taking it to Buffalo this week for examination by the Archaeological Society of that city. The features are those of a squaw, and the most tenable theory of those who examined it here is that in ages long gone by the owner fell on her face in the pool, and died there. The body of course decayed, and the living waters of the pool. All manner of curious speculations are hazarded as to the possible personality of the owner of the face. The streets of Thebes three thousand years ago, the owner of this skull was once a human being, who in all probability tramped through the forests of the world before the white man appeared upon the scene.

While stooping to get a drink on the day in question one of the hunters, while in the act of drinking, suddenly gave an unearthly yell, and sprang up, excitedly declared that he had seen a ghost in the spring. Mr. J. P. Klemf, proprietor of the Royal Hotel, Walkerton, courageously descended to the spring, and found that he was not afraid of ghosts, and turning back, unearthed the object that alarmed his companion. It proved to be a perfect human face turned to stone. The back part of the head is gone, and inside the skull is a considerable growth of roots and plants. Mr. Klemf brought it to town, where it has since formed an object of interest to the curious. Dr. J. J. Wason, D.D.S., purchased it, and is taking it to Buffalo this week for examination by the Archaeological Society of that city. The features are those of a squaw, and the most tenable theory of those who examined it here is that in ages long gone by the owner fell on her face in the pool, and died there. The body of course decayed, and the living waters of the pool. All manner of curious speculations are hazarded as to the possible personality of the owner of the face. The streets of Thebes three thousand years ago, the owner of this skull was once a human being, who in all probability tramped through the forests of the world before the white man appeared upon the scene.

While stooping to get a drink on the day in question one of the hunters, while in the act of drinking, suddenly gave an unearthly yell, and sprang up, excitedly declared that he had seen a ghost in the spring. Mr. J. P. Klemf, proprietor of the Royal Hotel, Walkerton, courageously descended to the spring, and found that he was not afraid of ghosts, and turning back, unearthed the object that alarmed his companion. It proved to be a perfect human face turned to stone. The back part of the head is gone, and inside the skull is a considerable growth of roots and plants. Mr. Klemf brought it to town, where it has since formed an object of interest to the curious. Dr. J. J. Wason, D.D.S., purchased it, and is taking it to Buffalo this week for examination by the Archaeological Society of that city. The features are those of a squaw, and the most tenable theory of those who examined it here is that in ages long gone by the owner fell on her face in the pool, and died there. The body of course decayed, and the living waters of the pool. All manner of curious speculations are hazarded as to the possible personality of the owner of the face. The streets of Thebes three thousand years ago, the owner of this skull was once a human being, who in all probability tramped through the forests of the world before the white man appeared upon the scene.

While stooping to get a drink on the day in question one of the hunters, while in the act of drinking, suddenly gave an unearthly yell, and sprang up, excitedly declared that he had seen a ghost in the spring. Mr. J. P. Klemf, proprietor of the Royal Hotel, Walkerton, courageously descended to the spring, and found that he was not afraid of ghosts, and turning back, unearthed the object that alarmed his companion. It proved to be a perfect human face turned to stone. The back part of the head is gone, and inside the skull is a considerable growth of roots and plants. Mr. Klemf brought it to town, where it has since formed an object of interest to the curious. Dr. J. J. Wason, D.D.S., purchased it, and is taking it to Buffalo this week for examination by the Archaeological Society of that city. The features are those of a squaw, and the most tenable theory of those who examined it here is that in ages long gone by the owner fell on her face in the pool, and died there. The body of course decayed, and the living waters of the pool. All manner of curious speculations are hazarded as to the possible personality of the owner of the face. The streets of Thebes three thousand years ago, the owner of this skull was once a human being, who in all probability tramped through the forests of the world before the white man appeared upon the scene.

While stooping to get a drink on the day in question one of the hunters, while in the act of drinking, suddenly gave an unearthly yell, and sprang up, excitedly declared that he had seen a ghost in the spring. Mr. J. P. Klemf, proprietor of the Royal Hotel, Walkerton, courageously descended to the spring, and found that he was not afraid of ghosts, and turning back, unearthed the object that alarmed his companion. It proved to be a perfect human face turned to stone. The back part of the head is gone, and inside the skull is a considerable growth of roots and plants. Mr. Klemf brought it to town, where it has since formed an object of interest to the curious. Dr. J. J. Wason, D.D.S., purchased it, and is taking it to Buffalo this week for examination by the Archaeological Society of that city. The features are those of a squaw, and the most tenable theory of those who examined it here is that in ages long gone by the owner fell on her face in the pool, and died there. The body of course decayed, and the living waters of the pool. All manner of curious speculations are hazarded as to the possible personality of the owner of the face. The streets of Thebes three thousand years ago, the owner of this skull was once a human being, who in all probability tramped through the forests of the world before the white man appeared upon the scene.

While stooping to get a drink on the day in question one of the hunters, while in the act of drinking, suddenly gave an unearthly yell, and sprang up, excitedly declared that he had seen a ghost in the spring. Mr. J. P. Klemf, proprietor of the Royal Hotel, Walkerton, courageously descended to the spring, and found that he was not afraid of ghosts, and turning back, unearthed the object that alarmed his companion. It proved to be a perfect human face turned to stone. The back part of the head is gone, and inside the skull is a considerable growth of roots and plants. Mr. Klemf brought it to town, where it has since formed an object of interest to the curious. Dr. J. J. Wason, D.D.S., purchased it, and is taking it to Buffalo this week for examination by the Archaeological Society of that city. The features are those of a squaw, and the most tenable theory of those who examined it here is that in ages long gone by the owner fell on her face in the pool, and died there. The body of course decayed, and the living waters of the pool. All manner of curious speculations are hazarded as to the possible personality of the owner of the face. The streets of Thebes three thousand years ago, the owner of this skull was once a human being, who in all probability tramped through the forests of the world before the white man appeared upon the scene.

While stooping to get a drink on the day in question one of the hunters, while in the act of drinking, suddenly gave an unearthly yell, and sprang up, excitedly declared that he had seen a ghost in the spring. Mr. J. P. Klemf, proprietor of the Royal Hotel, Walkerton, courageously descended to the spring, and found that he was not afraid of ghosts, and turning back, unearthed the object that alarmed his companion. It proved to be a perfect human face turned to stone. The back part of the head is gone, and inside the skull is a considerable growth of roots and plants. Mr. Klemf brought it to town, where it has since formed an object of interest to the curious. Dr. J. J. Wason, D.D.S., purchased it, and is taking it to Buffalo this week for examination by the Archaeological Society of that city. The features are those of a squaw, and the most tenable theory of those who examined it here is that in ages long gone by the owner fell on her face in the pool, and died there. The body of course decayed, and the living waters of the pool. All manner of curious speculations are hazarded as to the possible personality of the owner of the face. The streets of Thebes three thousand years ago, the owner of this skull was once a human being, who in all probability tramped through the forests of the world before the white man appeared upon the scene.

While stooping to get a drink on the day in question one of the hunters, while in the act of drinking, suddenly gave an unearthly yell, and sprang up, excitedly declared that he had seen a ghost in the spring. Mr. J. P. Klemf, proprietor of the Royal Hotel, Walkerton, courageously descended to the spring, and found that he was not afraid of ghosts, and turning back, unearthed the object that alarmed his companion. It proved to be a perfect human face turned to stone. The back part of the head is gone, and inside the skull is a considerable growth of roots and plants. Mr. Klemf brought it to town, where it has since formed an object of interest to the curious. Dr. J. J. Wason, D.D.S., purchased it, and is taking it to Buffalo this week for examination by the Archaeological Society of that city. The features are those of a squaw, and the most tenable theory of those who examined it here is that in ages long gone by the owner fell on her face in the pool, and died there. The body of course decayed, and the living waters of the pool. All manner of curious speculations are hazarded as to the possible personality of the owner of the face. The streets of Thebes three thousand years ago, the owner of this skull was once a human being, who in all probability tramped through the forests of the world before the white man appeared upon the scene.

While stooping to get a drink on the day in question one of the hunters, while in the act of drinking, suddenly gave an unearthly yell, and sprang up, excitedly declared that he had seen a ghost in the spring. Mr. J. P. Klemf, proprietor of the Royal Hotel, Walkerton, courageously descended to the spring, and found that he was not afraid of ghosts, and turning back, unearthed the object that alarmed his companion. It proved to be a perfect human face turned to stone. The back part of the head is gone, and inside the skull is a considerable growth of roots and plants. Mr. Klemf brought it to town, where it has since formed an object of interest to the curious. Dr. J. J. Wason, D.D.S., purchased it, and is taking it to Buffalo this week for examination by the Archaeological Society of that city. The features are those of a squaw, and the most tenable theory of those who examined it here is that in ages long gone by the owner fell on her face in the pool, and died there. The body of course decayed, and the living waters of the pool. All manner of curious speculations are hazarded as to the possible personality of the owner of the face. The streets of Thebes three thousand years ago, the owner of this skull was once a human being, who in all probability tramped through the forests of the world before the white man appeared upon the scene.

While stooping to get a drink on the day in question one of the hunters, while in the act of drinking, suddenly gave an unearthly yell, and sprang up, excitedly declared that he had seen a ghost in the spring. Mr. J. P. Klemf, proprietor of the Royal Hotel, Walkerton, courageously descended to the spring, and found that he was not afraid of ghosts, and turning back, unearthed the object that alarmed his companion. It proved to be a perfect human face turned to stone. The back part of the head is gone, and inside the skull is a considerable growth of roots and plants. Mr. Klemf brought it to town, where it has since formed an object of interest to the curious. Dr. J. J. Wason, D.D.S., purchased it, and is taking it to Buffalo this week for examination by the Archaeological Society of that city. The features are those of a squaw, and the most tenable theory of those who examined it here is that in ages long gone by the owner fell on her face in the pool, and died there. The body of course decayed, and the living waters of the pool. All manner of curious speculations are hazarded as to the possible personality of the owner of the face. The streets of Thebes three thousand years ago, the owner of this skull was once a human being, who in all probability tramped through the forests of the world before the white man appeared upon the scene.

While stooping to get a drink on the day in question one of the hunters, while in the act of drinking, suddenly gave an unearthly yell, and sprang up, excitedly declared that he had seen a ghost in the spring. Mr. J. P. Klemf, proprietor of the Royal Hotel, Walkerton, courageously descended to the spring, and found that he was not afraid of ghosts, and turning back, unearthed the object that alarmed his companion. It proved to be a perfect human face turned to stone. The back part of the head is gone, and inside the skull is a considerable growth of roots and plants. Mr. Klemf brought it to town, where it has since formed an object of interest to the curious. Dr. J. J. Wason, D.D.S., purchased it, and is taking it to Buffalo this week for examination by the Archaeological Society of that city. The features are those of a squaw, and the most tenable theory of those who examined it here is that in ages long gone by the owner fell on her face in the pool, and died there. The body of course decayed, and the living waters of the pool. All manner of curious speculations are hazarded as to the possible personality of the owner of the face. The streets of Thebes three thousand years ago, the owner of this skull was once a human being, who in all probability tramped through the forests of the world before the white man appeared upon the scene.

While stooping to get a drink on the day in question one of the hunters, while in the act of drinking, suddenly gave an unearthly yell, and sprang up, excitedly declared that he had seen a ghost in the spring. Mr. J. P. Klemf, proprietor of the Royal Hotel, Walkerton, courageously descended to the spring, and found that he was not afraid of ghosts, and turning back, unearthed the object that alarmed his companion. It proved to be a perfect human face turned to stone. The back part of the head is gone, and inside the skull is a considerable growth of roots and plants. Mr. Klemf brought it to town, where it has since formed an object of interest to the curious. Dr. J. J. Wason, D.D.S., purchased it, and is taking it to Buffalo this week for examination by the Archaeological Society of that city. The features are those of a squaw, and the most tenable theory of those who examined it here is that in ages long gone by the owner fell on her face in the pool, and died there. The body of course decayed, and the living waters of the pool. All manner of curious speculations are hazarded as to the possible personality of the owner of the face. The streets of Thebes three thousand years ago, the owner of this skull was once a human being, who in all probability tramped through the forests of the world before the white man appeared upon the scene.

While stooping to get a drink on the day in question one of the hunters, while in the act of drinking, suddenly gave an unearthly yell, and sprang up, excitedly declared that he had seen a ghost in the spring. Mr. J. P. Klemf, proprietor of the Royal Hotel, Walkerton, courageously descended to the spring, and found that he was not afraid of ghosts, and turning back, unearthed the object that alarmed his companion. It proved to be a perfect human face turned to stone. The back part of the head is gone, and inside the skull is a considerable growth of roots and plants. Mr. Klemf brought it to town, where it has since formed an object of interest to the curious. Dr. J. J. Wason, D.D.S., purchased it, and is taking it to Buffalo this week for examination by the Archaeological Society of that city. The features are those of a squaw, and the most tenable theory of those who examined it here is that in ages long gone by the owner fell on her face in the pool, and died there. The body of course decayed, and the living waters of the pool. All manner of curious speculations are hazarded as to the possible personality of the owner of the face. The streets of Thebes three thousand years ago, the owner of this skull was once a human being, who in all probability tramped through the forests of the world before the white man appeared upon the scene.

While stooping to get a drink on the day in question one of the hunters, while in the act of drinking, suddenly gave an unearthly yell, and sprang up, excitedly declared that he had seen a ghost in the spring. Mr. J. P. Klemf, proprietor of the Royal Hotel, Walkerton, courageously descended to the spring, and found that he was not afraid of ghosts, and turning back, unearthed the object that alarmed his companion. It proved to be a perfect human face turned to stone. The back part of the head is gone, and inside the skull is a considerable growth of roots and plants. Mr. Klemf brought it to town, where it has since formed an object of interest to the curious. Dr. J. J. Wason, D.D.S., purchased it, and is taking it to Buffalo this week for examination by the Archaeological Society of that city. The features are those of a squaw, and the most tenable theory of those who examined it here is that in ages long gone by the owner fell on her face in the pool, and died there. The body of course decayed, and the living waters of the pool. All manner of curious speculations are hazarded as to the possible personality of the owner of the face. The streets of Thebes three thousand years ago, the owner of this skull was once a human being, who in all probability tramped through the forests of the world before the white man appeared upon the scene.

While stooping to get a drink on the day in question one of the hunters, while in the act of drinking, suddenly gave an unearthly yell, and sprang up, excitedly declared that he had seen a ghost in the spring. Mr. J. P. Klemf, proprietor of the Royal Hotel, Walkerton, courageously descended to the spring, and found that he was not afraid of ghosts, and turning back, unearthed the object that alarmed his companion. It proved to be a perfect human face turned to stone. The back part of the head is gone, and inside the skull is a considerable growth of roots and plants. Mr. Klemf brought it to town, where it has since formed an object of interest to the curious. Dr. J. J. Wason, D.D.S., purchased it, and is taking it to Buffalo this week for examination by the Archaeological Society of that city. The features are those of a squaw, and the most tenable theory of those who examined it here is that in ages long gone by the owner fell on her face in the pool, and died there. The body of course decayed, and the living waters of the pool. All manner of curious speculations are hazarded as to the possible personality of the owner of the face. The streets of Thebes three thousand years ago, the owner of this skull was once a human being, who in all probability tramped through the forests of the world before the white man appeared upon the scene.

While stooping to get a drink on the day in question one of the hunters, while in the act of drinking, suddenly gave an unearthly yell, and sprang up, excitedly declared that he had seen a ghost in the spring. Mr. J. P. Klemf, proprietor of the Royal Hotel, Walkerton, courageously descended to the spring, and found that he was not afraid of ghosts, and turning back, unearthed the object that alarmed his companion. It proved to be a perfect human face turned to stone. The back part of the head is gone, and inside the skull is a considerable growth of roots and plants. Mr. Klemf brought it to town, where it has since formed an object of interest to the curious. Dr. J. J. Wason, D.D.S., purchased it, and is taking it to Buffalo this week for examination by the Archaeological Society of that city. The features are those of a squaw, and the most tenable theory of those who examined it here is that in ages long gone by the owner fell on her face in the pool, and died there. The body of course decayed, and the living waters of the pool. All manner of curious speculations are hazarded as to the possible personality of the owner of the face. The streets of Thebes three thousand years ago, the owner of this skull was once a human being, who in all probability tramped through the forests of the world before the white man appeared upon the scene.

While stooping to get a drink on the day in question one of the hunters, while in the act of drinking, suddenly gave an unearthly yell, and sprang up, excitedly declared that he had seen a ghost in the spring. Mr. J. P. Klemf, proprietor of the Royal Hotel, Walkerton, courageously descended to the spring, and found that he was not afraid of ghosts, and turning back, unearthed the object that alarmed his companion. It proved to be a perfect human face turned to stone. The back part of the head is gone, and inside the skull is a considerable growth of roots and plants. Mr. Klemf brought it to town, where it has since formed an object of interest to the curious. Dr. J. J. Wason, D.D.S., purchased it, and is taking it to Buffalo this week for examination by the Archaeological Society of that city. The features are those of a squaw, and the most tenable theory of those who examined it here is that in ages long gone by the owner fell on her face in the pool, and died there. The body of course