A great many were wounded; the exact number is not reported. The Turks say that the Armenians were the as-gressors. This the latter deny. The fracas was distinctly the outgrowth of > racial and religious prejudices.

> The streets of Constantinople and its suburbs are still patrolled by police, reinforced by troops, and it is under-stood that the torpedoes sent to the Dardanelles have been or are being placed in position in the straits. Ammunition has also been sent to the forts, and from other military movements which are going on, it would seem that the Turks are preparing to defend the passage of the Dardanelles should Great Britain attempt a naval demonstration in these waters. There dces not seem to be any material change in the diplomatic situation. The Turkish Ministers have held another conference, and additional communications have been exchanged with the representatives of the powers; but these monotonous proceedings no longer attract much attention, and few people believe that any decided change in the condition of the Armenian is likely to occur, unless the Porte is foreibly compelled to enter upon the work of bring> ing about reforms in Armenia. There no longer seems to be any doubt that the Armenians anticipated a serious disturbance when the attempt was made on Monday week, to present a petition to the Sultan through the Grand Vizier, but they claim that those of their race who fell in the streets in Constantinople upon that occasion were martyrs who gave their lives for Armenia in the hope of forcing the lowers to put extra pressure upon the Porte in the efforts now being made to bring about reform in the administration of Armenia.

MUSIC AND DRAMA.

Two Good Attractions Coming-Otis Skinner and W. C. Andrews.

The scenery which Otis Skinner uses in his production of "Villon the Vagabond," which Walter Burrige has painted, is said to be very handsome. The first act represents the great reception hall in the Louvre. The second act shows the interior of the Fir-Cone inn, an old Paris tavern of the fifteenth century, made famous by the poet. In this act, Mr. Burrige has caught the old smoky oak coloring successfully. The third act shows some private apartments in the palace of the Louvre in blue and gold. The last act is the courtyard of the prison of the Bastille, showing in its perspective old Paris.

Otis Skinner will present "Villon the

The quarterly meeting of the United Women's Baptist Mission Circles of this city was held the other evening in the Adelaide Street Church. There was a good attendance, each society being well represented. Mrs. Robertscn, president of the Adelaide Street Circle, presided, and in her opening remarks spoke of the pleasure they all felt in again having their former pastor, Rev. T. S. Johnson, among them. The pastor then gave a short address expressing his thanks for the Vagabond," on Monday evening next at the kind words spoken and his own satisfaction in again being in London. The churches have proved fruitless, the refugees tragedy had all the accessories of its declaring that they would not trust to the oft-repeated stage counterpart. It was a story of baffled love turned into in-ARMENIANS HORRIBLY TREATED sane fury. The innocent victim Constantinople, Oct. 3, via Sofia, Bul-repulsed the advances of the unloved garia, Oct. 9.—The blockade of the Armenian churches continues, as all the menian churches continues, and the Armenian churches continues and the Armenian churches c she was supposed to be dead, and which did not end until the girl's neck had assumed the appearance of a red, plowed field, and until her hands had been carved and crippled so that the flesh hung in shreds. THE INNOCENT VICTIM. Mabel Robson, the eldest daughter of Mr. W. R. Robson, was the victim, and the man who had attempted to slay her was John Layng, a neighbor's son. The disparity between their ages was almost equal to the difference be-tween their social stations in life. Layng was 28, a lumber measurer or farm laborer, as occasion or necessity demanded. Mabel Robson was 17, the pretty daughter of a well-to-do farmer, W. B. Robson, who also owns a farm at Markham, near Toronto. The families are neighbors. They live just two miles west of Denfield, on the road to Ailsa Craig. The residence of the Robsons was once an hotel, and is built up close to the side of the road. It is a splendid two-story affair of red brick, flanked by commodious barns, which overlook broad and well-cultivated fields. Across the road and down about twenty yards is situated the little three-roomed house of the Layngs. The windows are small and the roof low and squatty, and the little place is almost hidden behind a growth of elder bushes and a pile of rough stove wood. The farm is as small in proportion, and yet young Layng aspired to the hand of Mr. Rob-son's daughter. THE WOULD-BE MURDERER. The Layngs have lived on the old homestead "since Adam was a boy," so a neighbor stated, but old Michael Layng's statement that he had cleared the spot and settled on it when he came out from Ireland 40 years ago, is a much more accurate, if not so picturesque a statement. The Robsons, although they have resided in North Middlesex for fifteen years, only moved into their present residence four years ago. In this way John Layng became a day laborer for Mr. Robson, and incidentally fell in love with pretty Mabel, the buxom daughter of his employer. At no time did the girl encourage his attentions, but this, instead of cooling his ardor, only inflamed it and caused him to threaten to do what he actually tried to accomplish. It was part of Layng's duties when working in the back fields, to let the cows out of the field when evening came and start them towards the creek which crosses the road only a couple of hundred yards to the rear of Mr. Robson's place. Here it was Mabel's duty to take them in charge and see them safely home. Layng grew to look forward to the hour when it was time to turn the cows out of the pasture, as then he could see and meet The different branches of the work the girl he loved. In the summer season it was customary to milk the cows in the field, and once while Mabel was engaged at this humble occupathat should call forth the practical her, proposing marrage. But this came to Mr. Robson's ears, and at the latter end of August another farm hand let out the cows in the evening, but Mabel still went after them to the creek. Even before his formidable threat of marriage, Layng had taken advantage of his opportunities when working about the yard to ask the girl to run away with him. but she had merely laughed at the proposition. She told her father at last, and he advised a hot water treatment as calculated to cool his affections. In view of Layng's threats meeting, and a selection of music was Mr. Robson bought his daughter a revolver with which to protect herself,
