The Institute Society.

The London Collegiate Institute Literary Society met Friday atternoon. A resolution was passed wishing Mr. G. R. Faskin, B. A., success in his new field of labor. Miss Muriel Smith did some very pretty and difficult club swinging. Mr. R. A. Gray, B. A., then gave the society a rare intellectual treat in the form of a paper on the Baconian theory, in which he essayed to prove that Lord Bacon wrote the plays attributed to Shakespeare. To say the least the arguments were ingenious, and caused his hearers to entertain some grave suspicions as to the ground for their prejudice in the matter. Although the paper occupied an hour, the discussion which followed was most animated and the interest general. Messrs. Gahan and Arnot defended Shakespeare's right, and found exception to many of Mr. Gray's arguments. At 6 o'clock the discussion was adjourned till Monday afternoon when, no doubt, the arguments of both sides will be forcibly placed before the society.

A Fine Exhibition.

There was opened Saturday in the front up stair room of Mr. E. M. Hunt's picture store, Dundas street, a small but very interesting exhibition of pictures by members of the Canadian Artists' Association, a recently formed society which has for its object the holding of exhibitions in the cities not regularly visited by the Royal Academy. The collection embraces work from the studios of nearly all the best known professional artists, among which from the studios of nearly all the best known professional artists, among which are such names as L. R. O'Brien, F. M. Bell-Smith, Geo. A. Reid (who by the way won a medal at the World's Fair), F. M. Knowles, W. E. Atkinson and others. Such an exhibition cannot but have a very valuable educutional effect, and at the same time offers an unusual opportunity for those who desire to possess really good pictures, to get them direct from the artists and thus save money and at the same time secure a positive guarantee of their genuineness. The fact that several pictures which adorned the walls of the great art palace at the World's Fair are shown should draw a large crowd to see them.
