Old Rumor More Persistent Last Few Days.

KNEE IS BAD

Copyright.

New York, June 22.—The Rogers Hornsby rumor is afloat and bobbing like a cork on the waves today. It was due for a reappearance, what with the general heat and discomfort.

Every so often that rumor comes from St. Louis. Some day it may prove more than a rumor, for folks say that Rickey believes he can do better with his youngsters if Hornsby the wonderful does not sit at the other end of the Browns' table.

If Rickey thinks that way he must have reasons, based on what he meets in his team. It has happened that some ball players do not always fit their company. Sometimes—quite often, in fact—star players have been unable to win championships with teams of which they were members for a long time, Usually there was a reason, and a good one.

The star batter may be slow on his feet. It is not so noticeable where all the other players of the team are fast, but it hurts like blazes where all the other members are also slow. Then it take three base hits to score one run. If Rickey wishes to rid himself of Hornsby, maybe he figures that the services of his second baseman are impaired because of the knee trouble this year, which has kept Hornsby out of so many of the games. But if Hornsby has knee trouble which is permanent he is no longer the most valuable player in the National League, no matter how hard he may be able to bat. It takes more than batting to overcome a knee that is singing its farewell to baseball.

When a man's legs begin to go in baseball it is as bad as if he had been overtaken with premature of age. Should the St Louis club let Hornsby go to New York—presuming that it is would let the player out to the highest bidder—there would be such a roar as has not been heard yet. The rules prevent that for the moment, but not for not. Perhaps he would stick up his nose at anything equal stick up his nose at anything even green with a possibility of winning a team with a possibility of winning a team with a possibility of winning a so such a team you might not hear of so freely. But it's easy enough to would yow commercialism.

I does not look a bit as if Hornsby with public sentiment not a little when it permits a player to go who has grown up with the town. Perhaps the rumors that rise above St. Louis and float east every now and then are feelers. Is so much better than that in the National League that you wonder why it is so. Are the National League runners slower footed, or are the National League pitchers better at watching the bases than their rivals, or do the National League batters and runners find it better to play run and hit, and let the base-running settivity take. find it better to piay run and int, and let the base-running activity take care of itself, as extraneous for the time being?

If Eddie Collins goes at his best he may steal 50 bases this season. That is not a heap. In the old days there were men who stole 100. If the National League can do no better than it is doing, the maximum steals will be less than 35. Wow! What a falling off! Running bases does not seem to be strategy any more. Experienced managers were wont to say that good baserunners were the thinkers of the game runners were the thinkers of the game but if there were no base-running, on wonders what they would say vonders what they would say.
