ntribution towards a solution of the pro-has been offered by Mr. John Hague of to, and was published in The Montre idea is that if in considering this matter we re to give proper attention to the balance of d, we should have a better understanding of w the balance of trade really works. We yillustrate in this way. Suppose a nation ports a hundred millions worth, and exports y fifty millions worth. "All right," say only lifty millions' worth. "All right," say some people, "never mind this so-called adverse balance that merely shows a large foreign trade, and is sather to be welcomed." "You forget," says Mr. Hagne, "that nation has created a balance of debt against steelf, which if nov paid at the films will have to be paid at some future day, in some shape, with inharces."

that economists, even those of the most ultra Free Trade school, admit that Britain's excess Free Trade school, admit shat Britain's excess of imports over exports is largely paid for out of the interest on foreign securities which are held by British investors. The balance of debt theory comes in to some purpose there,
we should say.
Where The Herald goes wrong is in taking the acknowledged difficulties which heast this the acknowledged difficulties which beset the balance of trade question, and parading them as if these difficulties were peculiar to the Projectionist view of it, whereas they are common to both views of it—to the Free Trade as well as to the Protectionist theory. You do not by any means get rid of the balance of trade puzzle by anying that you are a Free Trader, and that you don't care a "continental" were your country's imports many millions each and every year more than her exports. You seem to think that all foreign trade is profitable. Suppose we import a million's worth of foreign products, of any kind, and some protectionist says: "How much better it would have been for us had we produced all this at home, instead of buying it abroad!" this at home, instead of buying it abroad!"

You reply: "All nonsense; if we don't progoods, which are virtually exchanged for them, and that settles it. All right, don't you

Has The Herald ever heard the story of the two boys, who, having been imprisoned "up chamber" for some boyish offence, said after-wards that during their confinement they made other? Well, some of the trade between Can-ada and the States is a good deal like that. And, it these of The Herald's persuasion had their way, there would be a good deal more of such unprofitable trade for Canada.

The Lambeth Conference.

The Workingmen's Association of St. Mark's Church, Parkale, was delighted last evening with an address by Rev. Prof. Simons of Trinity College on the Lambeth conference and the important significance of this consultation an church history. The lecture pointed out that the conference was merely a consultation of some 184 Anglican bishops, from all over the world, and that, while re-outions adopted by them were placed on record and carried weight, no rules could be made for church governance aince this was not a synod meeting. He alsobriefly reviewed the subjects discussed there and explained their importance. The president, Mr. Coxhend, eccupied the chair.

Sixty eight dollars for an overcost in New York and you can gat one like it for seven fifty at the Army and Nary stores. Now, we don't say you get as good a cost, but you can get a Metton coat for seven fifty at the Army and Navy stores which is copied from a strength dollar och in New York—the cut is executed that the test place to dug an overcost is the Army and Navy stores.
