

Although the 'big yard' has disappeared and the 'small yard' is covered with the debris of the old walls, the names and the critical spirit remain, as was amply evidenced the other day in the refectory after the junior athletic elections. It would appear that the mutual conviction is, that the others are 'nit, nit, nit.'

The Editorial Board is seriously thinking of advertising for a 'devil.' His work will probably be posing as an inspiration for editors when writing up, especially in their poetical hours.

A three days retreat at the end of September forms a fitting introduction to the serious duties of the scholastic year. The evident earnestness with which the boys entered into the spirit of the exercises, testify that it has been a time of grace. The name of Father Salmon of Kingston, who preached here in Father Tabaret's time 26 year's ago, will be revered when 20 more years have made us old. Father Lavoie's success with the French-Canadian students was all that could be desired.

The Junior Locals.

The change from the rather unsettled conditions of the last few months to the peace of the land of promise which the New Arts Building is to be, will mean much for the students in general. In keeping with the movement upward and onward, we herald a change too in the methods of this department, the more up-to-date title of which, viz. 'Junior Locals,' bears a special significance for every small-yarder. Hitherto they have perhaps been looked upon too much as children to be teased and petted, and many a time and oft has this riled young men and called forth the indignant protest of wounded dignity. 'Tis not our intention to run an Uncle Ben or an Aunt Jemimah column for the mystification of knickerbocker juveniles. We are here in a position of trust to voice the sentiments and give the news of the younger generation. The doings of the younger 'gentlemen' of College will form an integral part of the REVIEW. They in turn are expected to manifest a marked and lively interest in their corner, and by organizing and successfully managing literary, dramatical, musical and athletic clubs, furnish it with abundant matter for publication.
