A Soliloquy.

WITH APOLOGIES TO SHAKESPEARE.
To cough or not to cough—that is the question: Whether 'tis nobler in the chest to suffer The pain and soreness of a bad Bronchitis, Or to take arms against a list of symptoms, And, by this "PRUNOL," end them? To buy—to use—
Ah, yes; and, with a bottle, to say we end Bronchitis and the other grievous troubles The lung is heir to:—'tis a consummation Devoutly to be wish'd. To cough—to hawk:— To hawk! perchance to spit:—ay, there's the rub;
For in that spit what germs of death may come, When we delay to use this remedy. Must give us pause? there is Consumption, That makes calamity of so long life. For who would bear the whip and scourge of ills,
The hoarseness and the tickling in the throat. The pangs of Whooping Cough, the loss of voice.
The sleeplessness at night, the aching pains, That make of life one long and weary trial, When he relief most certain might obtain With this—this "PRUNOL?" Who would ills endure,
To grunt and cough under a weary life, But that the task of choosing what to use— A task that until recently was hard, But now is rendered easy—puzzles the will. And makes us rather bear the ills we have, Than fly to syrups that we know not of? Thus waiting does make patients of us all; And thus the native hue of rosy cheek Is sicklied o'er with the pale cast of ills, And constitutions of great might and power, With this disease, from health are turned awry And lose the good of life.
