

are the two areas that could be adversely affected. There are many areas that could be positively effected by common law arrangements such as proposed yesterday and we have to do a stage by stage analysis and if I must say, if the transitional arrangements that we call from the communique can't be worked out then certainly Manitoba would not be giving its support to a common market arrangement.

GRAY: I mean, there are even fears that policies, that programs that are distinctive to this country, like medicare, like unemployment insurance, like the minimum wage will become negotiable when Canadian businessmen have to compete with the Americans.

PAWLEY: Oh no, I don't think that's true at all because we need only look at the European situation. There's a wide difference in the common market area of Europe between for instance the socialist government in France and the Tory government in England.

GRAY: Yes, but those are all separate governments, aren't they Premier Pawley.

PAWLEY: Yes, and certainly we're a separate government in Candaa as vis-a-vis the separate government in the United States and that's the way it should remain.

GRAY: But you're talking about a bunch of separate governments in the European common market. It's not really
