quires no Answer, till first the Accounts are Audited in the Exchequer ; and then if any thing appears to charge them with, they must answer to it in the ordinary Course : They fay, the Affairs of the Treasury and Exchequer, are things, in a Method of Management, that no Treasurer, Chancellor of the Exchequer, Teller, or whatever Office he be, through whofe Hands the publick Monies are pass'd, can missipply or embezzle the fame, but it must be known, and may be detefted, either by fuperiour of inferiour Officers; and they demand, where the Man is that charges them? And that, till fuch are found, they ought not to be reproach'd; neither ought any to fuggest, that they have mifapply'd the publick Money, till their Accounts being call'd for, it appears, that they are not ready.

They likewife fay, That they have not run the Nation into Debt fince the War, otherwife than the juft Difcharge of what was in Demand, and the neceffary Annual Support of the Government required; and, for the Sake of their Country, they thall be glad to fee other Ways and Means found
