DUTIES OF OFFICERS.

Lt.-Colonel.

Sec. 5. The duties of the Lt.-Col. are the most important of any, but are of such general and universal nature, that it is needless they should be specified. It should be fully understood however, that the authority of the Lt.-Col. is paramount, in barracks, in camp, on the march, on parade, and at the mess.

Majors.

Sec. 6. The Majors will give every possible assistance to the Lt.-Colonel, and will see to the prompt and thorough execution of his orders. Each Major will take the general oversight and charge of one half the Regiment, such Companies as the Comp. Officer may direct.

Captains.

Sec. 7. The Captain is responsible for the appearance, drill, discipline and efficiency of his Company. He will keep the Company Roll and order book, and will be responsible not only for the arms, accoutrements and stores in possession of the men, but also for their proper condition at all times. He will hold his subaltern officers strictly to their duties after having fully and clearly explained to them what these consist of. He will see that Rifles are never removed from the Arm Racks or Amory without a written order being given for them. He will also impress upon the men that none of the following, or any other articles of arms, uniforms, or accoutrements are ever to be worn for other than regimental purposes, viz :

Greatcoats, Tunics, White Jackets, Bushies, Forage Caps, Belts, Trowsers, Side Arms.

The Captain will see that the Company is divided into squads, one for each non-com. Officer, each of the latter having the names of those living nearest to them. He will, besides, give the care and oversight of about two squads, in number equal to not less than one third of the whole strength, to each of his subalterns, taking charge himself of the remainder.
