ohn Bull is a very human fellow. Like the rest of us he does not mind an occasional fit of candon with himself, but he cannot abide that a distant but friendly neighbor should enture to offer him any advice as to how he should set his house in order. The Japanese are, as a rule, models of courtesy and deference. They would not give offence for all the world. They take long views of things. The their ambition may be boundless, they have hitherto chosen to display it in deeds rather than in syllables. The utmost wish for power that they have been credited with is that they should rejuvenate China and secure the northeastern quarter of Asia for the Asiafic as against the Muscovite. Gilbert and Sullivan opera, Mikado. But the bounds of Japanese ambition seem to be wider yet. Lord Lansdowne, who has proved himself a great handler of international affairs, was utterly unequal to the successful administration of the British war office. Mr. Brodrick took up the task of reforming that mechanism of ineptitude, and was glad to be pitch-forked into the Secretaryship for India, after having achieved no other distinction than to have given his name to a new style of soldiers' cap which was discarded as soon as he left Pall Mall. Mr. Arnold-Forster succeeded to the heritage of ambition and vexation, which. for his country's good, Mr. Brodrick abandoned, believing that he could work a mirocle on that which had well nigh destroyed the reputation of Lord Lansdowne, and had made Mr. Brodrick look as nearly ridiculous as it is possible for a cabinet minister to be. rublic opinion and the frantic prayers But Mr. Arnold-Forster's achievement of the Liberal apologists in Ontario as war minister was to disgruntle the and elsewhere.
