"I do not want," he said, "to represent an effete Liberalism. In the Liberal convention of last June our party rose above the asnes of its old past and put on record is determination to give the best regislation that we can possibly give. The new Liberal idea in Ontario was bern of that convention. The Toronto memoers in the legislature will hew to the line and do what is fair and square to all parties concerned."

The audience expected strong comment on the position of the government, but the raimers party had adopted all the gradient of the Liberal's after the June convention that they had not taken over before. By an unfortunate chance they had found themselves in power and their claim now was to get a chance from the other parties.

Why do do does not take the chance they have?" said Mr. Dewart. "There are grave proposems that must be solved in the interests of the whole province. It is a rather unfortunate thing that a party has undertaken to run the government and to deal for all the people without a mandate from all the people without a mandate from all the people it is unfortunate that the cabinet is still dickering for seats for some of its members with some kind of a committee in 1916 you nominated me in this riding as an Independent Liberal. The victory you won was not won by the old-time Liberals alone. You realized that there is a new thought and a new idea in Liberalism not only in Toronto, but thruout Ontario. You give credit, as I do, to Conservatives animated by the same wish and you realize that they, too, desire to serve the people—the people, not as J. J. Morrison refers to them, out the people of Ontario irrespective of party, creed crace. The idea of the new Liberalism is a square deal for all the people at all times." (Applauso.)

Mr. Dewart was greeted with the chorus, "Boys of the Old Brigade," on rising. The only question he definitely referred to was the soldiers' settlement colony at Kapuskasing, and the report of Lieut.-Col. Carmichael thereon to the Drury cabinet. The colonel's report, he said, had vindicated his (Mr. Dewart's) condemnation of the camp in the course of the election campaign. He had spoken concerning it only after he had produred a Special report at his own expense. Col. Carmichael declared it a waste of $800,000, a sham, mismanaged from the inception by men who did not understand the problem of soldiers' re-establishment.
