

TURKEY: "Now to end this Armenian question."

SHOUTING THE BATTLE CRY OF "FEED 'EM"

Tramp, tramp, tramp the boys are marching—Uncle Sam's newest and youngest army—and their battle cry is "Keep the home soil turning!" Enlisted in the United States Boys' Working Reserve are over 800,000 high school boys who have volunteered to prepare and to hold themselves in readiness to go on farms, as fast as they are called, to help the farmers of this country produce the banner crops of foodstuffs imperatively needed to win the war. Illinois has to date enrolled about 25,000 boys, of which Chicago has furnished nearly 10,000.

The strategy and plan of campaign of this great army is to "Beat the kaiser," to "Beat the Hun," and to "Drive a strait furrow to Berlin," all of which highly commendable objectives, with others of similar tenor, were blazoned forth on banners carried in a huge parade of Chicago high school farm volunteers which passed through the downtown streets on Wednesday of last week. Michigan boulevard has witnessed many historic parades, but never before have its broad and wind-swept pavements resounded to the marching feet of thousands of embryo farmers, potential soldiers of the soil who, too young to serve in the army or navy, have volunteered to do their best to help win the war by increasing the food production of the country. Chicago is illate as to parades in these war times, but this one awakened a degree of patriotic enthusiasm comparable only with the departure of the city's regiments for war service and later its contingents of selected men for the national army.

About 11,000 high school boys were in line, headed by a platoon of mounted police and the famous Chicago Band. One division was made up of 3,000 high school cadets in their trim grey uniforms, marching with the precision of well drilled soldiers. The majority of the marchers, however, wore the (un-)conventional garb of the ordinary high school boy, except where varied by overalls, straw hats and other accessories of the sure-nough farm worker. Many carried rakes, hoes and pitchforks, to show that they are ready for business at any moment. The photograph reproduced on this page shows the type of boys: sturdy intelligent lads who with a little training will prove exceedingly valuable helpers on any farm. A dozen bands, many floats, farm tractors and agricultural implements of almost every sort, both auto-motive and horse drawn, from hay rakes and mowers to gang-plows and self-binders, were in the line.

So much for the parade itself, which was designed to acquaint the public with the purpose and the plan of the United States Boys' Working Reserve, encourage further enlistments therein, and show the quality of the human material now available for farmers who need help in putting in, caring for, and harvesting their crops. As the boys marched many of them lustily sang, "Where do we go from here, boys; where do we go from here?" The answer to that question is up to the farmers of Illinois, so far as this particular contingent of boys is concerned, though the United States Boys' Working Reserve is a national organization, created under the statutory power of the United States Department of Labor, operating through the State Councils of defense of the various states. Thus the farmers of any state can draw upon this practically inexhaustible reservoir of labor.

Of the 800,000 or more boys who National Director William E. Hall estimates will be placed on the farms of this country during the present year at least 100,000 have practical experience on farms last summer. In this connection it is of interest to note that the 700 Chicago boys placed on farms last year, notwithstanding the plan was then in its infancy and only crudely organized, unfavorable reports were reached with regard to only three boys. All boys enrolled in the United States Boys' Working Reserve must pass a physical examination and be of good character. Most of them have received some instruction in the rudiments of agriculture during the last few weeks through a special course of study into the high schools, which included practice in harnessing and un-harnessing horses.

These boys will not go to the farms filled with any extravagant notions as to the wages they should receive. They are plainly told that their job is to please their employers, perform their work well, and in each case accept such pay as the farmer considers just. On the other hand, the farmer should remember that the boys are, for the greater part, actuated by patriotic motives, and that they could easily command good wages in city offices and industrial establishments, where there is exceptional demand for boys this year. In short, they are giving up their summer play time, or their opportunity to earn good wages in the city, as the case may be, to help win the war. President Wilson has asked them to do this, state and city officials and the public press, as well as their own teachers, have reiterated the appeal, and the boys have responded nobly. Therefore they are entitled to a square deal in every sense of the word. As to their efficiency, they are of course for the most part not trained farm workers, but they learn very quickly. On this point the testimony of B. F. Harris, extensive landowner and banker of Champaign, Ill., is decidedly interesting. Mr. Harris, who is vice chairman of the Illinois state council of defense, presiding at the better communities conference held at Champaign last week, said that he has several boys of the United States boys working reserve on his farms and that they are giving excellent satisfaction.

The placing of these boys on farms in Illinois, accomplished through the local bankers and the county organization co-operating with the state council of defense at Chicago. Presumably the work is organized along substantially similar lines in other states. The county director is appointed by the federal state director, to whom he reports. He is assisted by a county committee made up of a prominent farmer or agricultural leader; a banker or business man; a man or woman competent to direct welfare work for the boys; a school superintendent or principal, and the editor of a local newspaper. All local bankers are supplied with cards on which farmers may make application for boys. These applications are passed upon by the county committee and then forwarded to the federal state director for action. If approved a boy is selected for that particular farm. The underlying idea is to get the right boy on the right farm. It is very important that farmers desiring boys should make application at once, or as early as possible. It is an advantage, although not a necessity, to have the boy reach the farm a few days before actually needed for regular work, so he may become accustomed to the farm routine and "learn the ropes" before getting into the thick of it. Through the welfare member of the county committee, co-operating with such agencies as the local or county Y. M. C. A., the churches and Sunday schools, civic organizations, etc., supervision will be maintained over the boys and efforts made to provide wholesome recreation in the way of occasional social events in which they can participate. It is hoped and expected that every community into which these boys may come will feel a degree of responsibility for their moral welfare and co-operate in the plans having that end in view. This does not mean that the boys are to be coddled or given special favors, but that they shall be brought in touch with the wholesome and uplifting influences and elements of the community rather than those that are detrimental to health or morals.
