HAMPTON.

ipton, Sept. 26-The Kings count Tracers' Institute has been in session here for the past two days. On Thursday evening, Agricultural hall was filled to the doors with a select and intelligent audience to listen to the various speakers on the educational work of this province and Kings county in particular. on the platform were the chairman, Rev. C. D. Schofield, Doctor Inch, chief superintendent of education; Prof. William Raymond, of the New Brunswick University; Inspector Steeves, Fred. M. Sproul, Councillor S. Flewwelling, chairman of the local board of school trustees, and Secretary Smith, of the station school. After preliminary remarks by the chair-After preliminary remarks by the chairman, welcoming the feachers to Hampton, Professor Raymond was introduced and read an excellent paper on the value of a college education.

He presented figures showing that a large percentage of successful men in all the various walks of life were university graduates. If a man who sports a B. A. after his name proves a failure, that is no discredit to the university through which he passed. The B. A. simply shows that the man had a chance but did not

which he passed. The B. A. simply shows that the man had a chance but did not profit by it.

Fred. M. Sproul, on being called upon, said that he had not been given any particular subject to dwell upon, but he would welcome the visiting teachers to Hampton as a teacher, having been one himself for a number of years. He sympathized with them in their many difficulties and struggles and thought that the government should do more for them in the shape of pecuniary symard.

Doctor Inch, received a gratifying reception, on coming forward, to address the large audience. He said that he had just returned from a visit to Winnipeg. It was his original intention, to have gone through to the Pacific coast, and have seen once in his lifetime the glorious mountains of our western heritage, and the entriducing view of the vest Pacific Ocean, but in response to a call to duty and a telegram from the effective in the had turned his back on temptation and homeward his footsteps turned from wandering, comparatively speaking, on a foreign strand. But there was one thing he brought with him, and that was an enlarged and more enlightened idea of the vast grander and importance of our great heritage—this magnificent Dominion of Canada. The learned doctor then took heritage—this magnificent Dominion of Canada. The learned doctor then took up the McDonald system of schools, and explained the objections to and the advantages of such a system, and pointed out how Hampton Village and the Station might enjoy similar advantages by amalgamating their schools at some central point between the two places. He agreed with Mr. Sproul with regard to the teachers deserving better remuneration, but said that, both government and opposition maintained that it was impossible to spare more from the provincial funds. The officency solution was higher taxation for the rate payers, who received the direct benefit. Secretary Smith said that he had had the privilege of young to school occasion.

Secretary Smith said that he had had the privilege of going to school occasionally up to his 10th year. He knew the need and value of money, but he thought that the teachers had a far higher reward than mere money in the nobility of the work in which they were engaged within a light of the work in which they were engaged within a light of the work in which they were engaged within the papeause is any criterion, then Inspector Steeves was the most popular speaker of the evening, for when he was called upon to address the meeting he had to remain silent for some time in order to allow the spontaneous outburst to sub-

He felt at home among the teachers and trusted that the young men would enjoy their society equally as well as he had when somewhat younger, and the result might be easily anticipated as this is the greatest village in the province for making matches. As he was the last speaker he would take the liberty of moving a vote of thanks to those who had contributed to the success of the evening. This was ably seconded in a neat little speech by the Rev. Mr. Shaw.

John March spoke briefly, welcoming the teachers from the standpoint of a veteran. He taught school in London before coming to this country and Hampton was his first location when a school house

John March spoke briefly, welcoming the teachers from the stundpoint of a vetter. He taught school in London before coming to this country and Hampton was his first location when a school house was built for him, which subsequently developed into a grammar school, the last principal of which was that also han Raymond, father of the professor, who had so ably addressed the meeting.

The speeches were interspersed with music. Miss Bartlett, accompanied on the organ by Miss Lodge, gave a solo, which received a deserved encore. Two young laddes favored the audience with a duct. Successful to of the Teacher, his remarks being praise.

The meeting broke up at 11 o'clock with cheers and the singing of the national anthem.
