

eventually landed him in C.A.R.U. The reason for that first delinquency was, in my opinion, simply estimating the details of what we shall pass over. The punishment that the defendant underwent in detention was small in comparison to the unfortunate circumstance that brought him to his present R. U.

It is those that Kenny starts a behavior that is different to defend. He cannot defend it, and does not wish me to attempt to do so. May we not ask the reason for this self-abnegation? The answer is simple. He knows no reason for his poor behavior - he cannot understand it. Why, he asks, was he amenable to discipline when, with his Regt but so apparently
