FRIENDS By Nina Moore Jamieson

When other days have come, and we Are parted, old and gray, Shall you remember those cross We used to say?

Shall you remember all the times We quarreled and once more Made friends; then disagreed again Worse than before?

Nay, rather let us both forget, And until memory ends, Remember but the pleasant things-Let us be friends.

On account of the scarcity of plain Linen (which is being used in the manufacture of aeroplanes), we find the Maderia Embroidered Linens almost impossible to buy. Our stock, which we were to have for Christmas trat'e of 1917, has just come to hand and as this was bought over a year ago, we consider the prices at least 50 per cent under today's value.
