IMPORTANCE OF THE SUN. In an article on "The Nature of an Astronomer's Work," in the North American Review, William W. Campbell, Director of Lick Observatory, says:

"If we would learn the nature of the stars, whether they are solid, liquid or gaseous, whether they are new or comparatively old, whether their temperatures are high or comparatively low, we should begin by making a study of our own star—our sun. It is the only star near enough to present a disk, and therefore to let us study it in some detail. All other stars remain as points of light even when the powerful telescopes magnify them three-thousandfold. There are observatories established for the sole purpose of investigating the sun, and many astronomers are constantly employed in studying the structure of all its visible portions, the laws followed by the heat and light radiated from all parts of its surface, and the conditions indicated by the spectrum of each part. It is not too much to say that our physical knowledge of the stars would today be almost a blank if we had been unable to approach them through the study of our sun. Several of the most interesting portions of our sun are invisible except at times of solar eclipse. Our knowledge of the sun will be incomplete until these portions are thoroughly understood; and this is the reason why eclipse expeditions are dispatched, at great expense of time and money, to occupy stations within the narrow shadow belts in whatever corners of the earth these events occur."

Subtraction. The teacher was giving a lesson in subtraction. It had taken them several days to master the mysteries of addition, and in this rule she found them no less dull. Driven to desperation by the stupidity of their replies, she rashly promised three whole pennies to the child who gave her the brightest answer.

Town at Cat's Funeral. McClelland's store cat, petted by the entire village of Emma, N. C., and named in honor of the township, on account of the heroic distinction it attained a number of years ago in saving the life of one man and by the same act leading to the hanging of two others, was run over by a train the other day, says an Asheville despatch. When it was recognized that it was Emma that had been killed the town crew tenderly took the body to a safe place until arrangements were made for a proper burial. The whole town attended the services at the cemetery, which were of an imposing nature.

WHEN WOMEN HAD VOTES. Englishman Not Certain They Are Disqualified Now. Have women ever been legally disqualified from voting? This question was raised by Professor J. H. B. Mosserman in a lecture at the Royal Gallery, at Westminster, writes a London correspondent.

He pointed out that in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries women landowners had exactly the same rights as male landowners. It was the general custom, however, for them to do their civic business by proxy, just as they did their military service by proxy.
