Always Cutting It Closer.

Why is it that whizzes past you on the read, instead of being one of the big, powerful cars that you naturally expect to have pass you, it's generally a flivver?

this:

The answer is this:

There are two reasons. No, three. First because there are so many flivvers on the road that there is that much more chance of a flivver passing

The second is that it always exas perates the owner of a larger car to have a flivver pass him and therefore he pays more attention to the passing of a flivver, and thinks it happens oftener than it does.

The Inferiority Complex. And the third is that flivver drivers drive fast because they have an inferiority complex.
