LONDON PLAYERS' AVERAGES. The averages of the players of the ondon club are here given, including esterday's game at Hamilton. The ercentages are taken from the official ores as they appeared in The Adverser. Cockman leads in batting with a percentage of .385. He has played in 25 games, and has hit steadily since joining the club. In only five of the games has he failed to get a hit. His fielding average of .830 is the lowest of the three outfielders.

Johnson's average of .303 in batting is a surprise in a pitcher, but is accounted for by the steady average hit of one a game. In only eight of his 36 games has he failed to hit safely. His fielding average of .890 is very good, considering the number of different poitions in which he has played. Gunther leads the team in fielding with .965. He has made but 18 errors, in 52 games, and he contributed some of these while behind the bat. His batng has taken a terrific drop. In the ast 17 games he has hit safely but 11 Previous to them, his batting was the heaviest in the league, and if he had kept up, a fine percentage would have been to his credit at the close of
