BY LOUIS TRACY. Author of "The Stowaway," "The Message," "The Wings of the Morning," Etc.

Today, unhappily, neither Prince Michel nor his wife was in tune for a family conclave. Monseigneur was ruffled, distinctly so, and Madame was on the verge of tears.

when Alec entered the room he was aware of a sudden silence, accentuated by a half-repressed sob from his mother. Instantly, he took the blame on his own shoulders. He expected difficulties; but he was not prepared for a scene.

"Why, mother, dear," he said, bending over her with a tenderness that contrasted strongly with Prince Michael's affected indifference, "what is the matter? Surely you and dad have not been worrying about me! You can't keep me in the nest always, you know. And I only want to earn the wherewithal to live. That is not so very terrible, is is?"

The distressed woman looked up at him with a wan smile. She seemed to have aged since the morning. There was a pathetic weakness in her mouth and chin that was noticeably absent from her son's strong lineaments, and it occurred to Alec with a pang that he had never seen his mother so deeply moved. "I suppose one must endure the world's changes," she murmured. "It was foolish on my part to imagine that things could continue forever on the same lines; but I shall not grieve, Alec, if no cloud comes between you and me. It would break my heart—"
"Oh, come now!" he cried, simulating winter.

"Well, sir. candidly speaking, I have not. But I saw in a newspaper the other day a paragraph of advice to a young man. 'No matter how small your income may be, live within it; that is the beginning of wealth,' it said. How profound! I applied it to myself My inthe beginning of wealth, it said. How profound! I applied it to myself. My income is nil. There I encountered a serious obstacle at the very start of the Great Money Stakes. But——, "This is a grave discussion, Alec. I have that to say which may pain you. Pray be serious,"

"Oh, I am—quite serious. My ponies and the dog eart are in Dumoni's cata-

"On, I am—quite serious. My ponies and the dog cart are in Dumont's catalogue for the next sale. I resigned my membership of the polo club today. Tomorrow, or eke tonight. I look for a job. "I—er—suppose you—er—look to me for some assistance?" coughed Prince Michael.

His wife rose. Her face was greywhite, her eyes blazed. "Alec knows we are poor. Why torture him—and me? I refuse to allow it! I refuse!" Her voice took a tragic note, thin and shrill; there was a pitiful quivering of her lips that wrung her son's heart and he was utterly at a loss to understand why a discussion as to his future should lead to this display of passion.

"But, mother, darling," he cried, "why are you grieving so? You and dad must maintain a certain state—one begins by assuming that—and that it is no secret that the Delgrado side of the family was not blessed with wealth. Very weil. Let balance, eh? Really, why weep?"

Alec's gallant attempt to avert the storm failed again. His Serene Highness muttered words in a foreign tongue that sounded anything but serene. The Princess did not understand; but her son did. His brows wrinkled and the good-humored gleam died out of his eyes.

"Perhaps, sir," he sald stiffly, "this subject had better be discussed when my mother is not present."

Prince Michael looked at him fixedly. For some reason the little man was very angry, and he seemed to resent the implied slur on his good taste.

"I am determined to end this farce, once and for all," he vowed. "Before you joined us, I told the Princess—"

The door was flung open. The young man who had followed Joan and Alec his pink and white face was crimson now, and his manner that of unmeasured, almost uncontrollable excitement. He gazed at them with a wildness that bordered on frenzy, yet it was clear that their own marked agitation was only what he expected to find.

gazed at them with a wildness that bordered on frenzy, yet it was clear that their own marked agitation was only what he expected to find.
"Ah, you have heard?" he snapped, biting at each syllable.
"Heard what, Julius?" demanded Monseigneur, with an instant lowering of the princely mask, since Julius dabbled in stocks and was reputed well-to-do.

"The news! The news from Kosnovia!"

Prince Michael affected to yawn. "Oh, s that all?" he asked.
"All! Grand Dieu, what more would you have? It means—everything."
"My good Julius, it is long since I was so disturbed. What, then, has happened? The Danube in flood is no new thing."

"The Danube!" and the newcomer's voice cracked. "So you do not know—sire?" The little word seemed to have the explosive force of nitro-glycerin. Its de-tonation rang through the room and left them all silent, as though their ears were stunned and their tongues paralyz-ed. Alec was the first to see that some

Danderne Grows Hair

ANDERINE is to the hair what fresh showers of rain and sunshine are to vegetation. It goes right to the roots, invigorates and strengthens them. Its exhilarating, stimulating life-producing properties cause the hair to grow abundantly long, strong and beautiful. It at once imparts a sparkling brilliancy and velvety softness to the hair, and a few weeks use will cause new hair to sprout all over the scalp. Use it every day for a short time, after which two or three times a week will be sufficient to complete whatever growth

A lady from St. Paul writes in substance. "When I began using Danderine my hair would not come to my shoulders and now it is away below my hips." Another from Newark, N. J. "I have been using Danderine regularly. When I first started to use it I had very little hair, now I have the most beautifullong and thick hair anyone would want to have."

NOW at all druggists in three sizes 25c, 50c and $1.00 per bottle

Danderine enjoys a greater sale than any other one preparation regardless of kind or brand, and it has a much greater sale than all of the other hair preparations in the world combined.
